B.C.Tel move to boost rates under fire

The B.C. branch of the Consumers Association of Canada will formally oppose two rate increases sought this year by the B.C. Telephone Company.

CAC Vancouver office manager Janet Fast said today the organization will intervene before the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

B.C. Tel announced Monday it will apply for increases for private and business telephones.

However, the provincial government says it has no intention of intervening in the rate increase application.

"I doubt we will make any submission," said Universities, Science and Communications Minister Pat McGeer.

The proposed increases would raise Victoria's monthly private phone residential rate by almost a dollar, from $7.65 to $8.05 June 1 and to $8.60 on Dec. 17.

The private business rate here would go up by almost $3, from $19.70 a month to $21.15 in June and to $22.65 in December.

There would be no increase in two-party or multi-party residential service rates. The rates would not go up for touch calling or residential or business extension phones.

The CAC's Fast called the proposed rate increases excessive because B.C. Tel has failed for three years to improve quality of service.

The company did not make improvements ordered in 1977 after the last rate adjustment, she said.

"The CRTC ordered B.C. Tel to clean up its act and that hasn't happened.

"It would be rather naive to expect them (B.C. Tel) to do it this time."

Problems include on-line static, incomplete calls, cut-offs and slow service, she said.

"Obviously the rate increase went elsewhere."

The increase application comes at a time shareholders received the highest dividend rate ever, she said.

The company was recently ordered to return $7 million in excess profits to customers.

McGeer said: "This is a federal matter. If the federal government were to return the jurisdiction to British Columbia, that would be a different question altogether."

McGeer doesn't feel the province should make any representations to the CRTC.

B.C Tel labelled the increases "absolutely essential" to permit financing of a $301 million capital program of construction projects to meet service demands in 1980.

B.C. Tel said in a news release it wants a 5.3-per-cent increase on residential service, effective June 1, and a second increase to bring that up to 12.5 per cent, effective Dec. 17.

The company is seeking a 7.3-per-cent increase for business lines by June, increasing to 15 per cent by December.

Long distance rates in B.C. and Alberta have been restructured to add two per cent to revenue.

B.C. Tel chairman Gordon MacFarlane said if the full application is approved, revenues in 1980 will increase by $49.3 million, or six per cent of total revenue.

MacFarlane said it is the first application for an increase since 1976 — rates were adjusted in May, 1977 — and blamed it on spiralling interest rates and rising costs.

Visit the stars

Jill Clayburgh has been nominated as best actress for the second time in two years.

After a spectacular performance in An Unmarried Woman, she won high praise during the past 12 months for a similar role in Starting Over.

The Academy Awards will be announced on April 14.

Clayburgh began her acting career in 1972 in Portnoy's Complaint but her roles continued to be relatively minor until she got the chance to give her classic portrayal of a woman recently divorced in An Unmarried Woman.

She had been considered a major challenger for the Oscar but it went to Jane Fonda for her performance in Coming Home.

The Victoria Times and VI*90 this year are again sponsoring a Visit the Stars contest, offering a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood for the person who correctly predicts the Oscar winners for best actress, best actor and best movie.

The official entry form, along with the full list of rules, is in an advertisement on page 29 today.

Try the spies, mob chants as Ghotbzadeh goads U.S.

Times News Services

Tens of thousands of Iranians marched on the U.S. embassy in Tehran today protesting against the deposed shah's move to Egypt and demanding the American hostages be put on trial.

Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh called the shah's move "a moral victory for Iran."

An angry crowd estimated at between 50,000 and 60,000 demonstrated outside the U.S. embassy but there were no reports of violence. The crowd shouted denounciations of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and "American imperialism."

Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi is running a high fever and is likely to be operated on in a few days, Sadat said today after visiting the ousted Iranian monarch in his hospital room.

"The ex-shah has 21 of the best lawyers in the world and has the support of the United States and Western European countries," Ghotbzadeh told a news conference in Tehran "but seeing that our case was strong enough to put him in jail and to pave the way for his extradition, he fled."

"It was a moral victory for the Iranian case against the shah," he said.

Asked about the next step regarding the release of the American hostages, now in their 142nd day of captivity, the foreign minister said: "We'll wait and see."

Ghotbzadeh denied the release of the 50 Americans was linked with the extradition of the shah.

"Let us make it two separate cases," he said. "The extradition of the shah is one case and the hostages is the other.

"As I have explained, at the end, the Panamian government had these two issues all mixed up."

Tehran radio said the shah's arrival in Cairo "could be a divine gift because it will lead to a revolution in that Islamic country which will liberate its people from the imperialist and Zionist reign."

Meanwhile, the White House said Iran would bear "full responsibility" for any punitive action against the U.S. embassy hostages as a result of the shah's move to Egypt.

Several Iranian officials have suggested the hostages be tried as spies as a result of the shah's leaving Panama. However, President Carter's aides are saying they do not expect the shah's flight to Egypt will have strong repercussions on the American hostages or the search for peace in the Middle East.

Prices still soaring in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a virtual replay of January's torrid inflation, United States' consumer prices soared another 1.4 per cent in February, the government reported today.

Last month's increase in the labor department's consumer price index matched the 1.4 per cent rise in January for a compounded annual rate of some 18 per cent. The culprits again were sharply higher gasoline and home heating oil prices and mortgage interest rates, the report showed.

An 18 per cent rate for the entire year would be the worst inflation since the Second World War price controls were lifted in 1946 and a considerable jump from last year's 13.3 per cent inflation.

"It's virtually identical, with the exception of apparel being a little more moderate," labor department economist Patrick Jackman said of the February report. "I would look for mortgage interest and energy to continue rising. I don't really foresee any improvement until June or July..."

The labor department also reported that inflation continued to take its toll on earnings.

Average weekly earnings fell 1.4 per cent from January to February

CP strike cuts island supplies

Delays are beginning to show in the shipment of food and other consumer goods to Vancouver Island from the mainland after only one day of a strike by CP Rail employees.

The strike by 60 members of the Seafarers International Union, who work on freight vessels, began at noon Monday.

Affected is the shipment of foodstuffs, general merchandise, coal sulphur, liquified propane gas, machinery and paper products to the Island.

Commodities shipped to the mainland from the Island include lead concentrates, pulp and paper products, lumber, scrap metal and fish products.

The freight companies are trying to use the B.C. Ferry service but the system can't cope with the increased traffic.

As many as 23 trucks were backed up at the same terminal at one point this morning.

Meanwhile, the trucking companies met today with Transport Minister Alex Fraser to make a pitch for extra sailings to cope with the added commercial traffic.

Bill Blaney, president of the B.C. Motor Transport Association, said prior to the meeting that the solution seemed simple.

The government has ferries which are idle at night and the freight companies have trailers that they can't move.

The obvious solution is to run the ferries at night, Blaney said.

Fraser, however, indicated before going into the meeting that the truckers wouldn't get the extra runs.

But he said he would be bringing the matter up at a board of directors meeting later this week.

Blaney estimated that CP Rail vessels handled 60 to 70 per cent of all the freight coming to the Island from Vancouver.

Herb Harris, Victoria manager for Johnston Terminals, said his company is already experiencing a backlog in goods to be moved.

He estimated the effect of the strike will be "very very serious."

$500M suit over reactor

PARSIPPANY, N.J. (AP) — General Public Utilities Corp., owner of the crippled Three Mile Island reactor, said today it has sued the reactor's designer and manufacturer for more than $500 million.

The utility said it has charged Babcock and Wilcox Co. with "gross negligence, strict liability for equipment failure, intentional breach of contract and breach of express and implied warranties" in connection with the reactor involved in the accident last March.

The utility owns Metropolitan Edison, which operated the reactor at the Three Mile Island plant near Middletown, Pa. The plant was the site of the worst accident in the history of commercial nuclear energy in the U.S.

GPU Chairman William Kuhns said the company, after its own investigation of the accident, "firmly believes that the proximate cause of the accident was the failure of Babcock and Wilcox" to provide proper procedures and training to the utility's operators.

The suit alleges the Babcock and Wilcox procedures and training for both routine and emergency conditions were incorrect, incomplete and inappropriate to the system and misled the operators in their handling of the plant.

83-cent dollar

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian dollar tumbled into the 83-cent U.S. range on North American markets in morning trading today, for the first time in 13 months.

The currency opened at 83.96 cents U.S., slightly below the previous close of 84.01, and was trading at 83.88 this afternoon. It has not traded at such a low level since closing at 83.79 Feb. 28, 1979.

$2M loss predicted for Maggie successor

By JAKE BANKY

If the Princess Marguerite had run this summer it would have made a substantial profit.

But her replacement, the Queen of Prince Rupert, will lose a lot of money on the Victoria-Seattle run.

That conclusion is contained in a confidential briefing paper compiled by the staff of the legislature's committee on Crown corporations.

The paper says the Marguerite made a profit of $250,000 last summer and was expected to show a net gain of $900,000 this summer. These figures include depreciation and refit costs.

Because of reduced capacity and assuming only one return trip per day, the Queen of Prince Rupert is expected to be $2.4 million in the red at the end of the summer.

The briefing paper downgrades the proposal that the Rupert make two round-trips every 24 hours.

"This can be done, but it would involve night travel which would be neither convenient or attractive for most passengers."

The document states: "Based on cost comparision alone, first choice would be the Princess Marguerite. However, the decision apparently has already been made on grounds of safety and reliability that the Princess Marguerite will not operate in 1980."

The paper does not examine the validity of that decision.

If the bigger Queen of Surrey had been used on the Victoria-Seattle service, as suggested by many, it would also have lost money.

Because of high refit costs and increased depreciation it is estimated the Surrey would have lost at least $600,000 over the summer. Instead the Surrey will go on the midcoast run to Prince Rupert and lose an estimated $5 million a year.

That is $1.8 million more than the annual loss incurred by the Queen of Prince Rupert on that run.

The Rupert, after its summer in southern waters, will be placed on permanent service between Prince Rupert and the Queen Charlotte Islands. That will also be a losing proposition.

The confidential document says under the most optimistic conditions net loss on this service will be $3.2 million a year. This represents an annual subsidy of about $600 for every resident of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Meanwhile, the discussion paper suggests a permanent replacement for the Marguerite might be found next year when two new jumbo ferries go into service and the Ferry Corporation finds itself with two surplus vessels, each with a capacity of more than 1,000 passengers.

As for the proposed jetfoil service between Victoria and Seattle, the paper reveals a fare of $20 for a one-way trip has been discussed.

"However, the organizers plan to operate the service so that it at least breaks even and for this reason fare levels will depend on the lease cost to be negotiated with Boeing."

Move the school? Horrors, he said

Relocating historical Craigflower school is a bad idea, Saanich council was told Monday by a member of the Hallmark Society.

Moving it would be like trying to relocate the Plains of Abraham to make way for a parking lot, society secretary Michael Halleran said.

He was commenting on council's decision to ask the provincial heritage restoration branch to move the 125 year-old school house to another site because it protrudes three metres on to the Admirals Road right-of-way.

The society said in a letter Halleran read that "a historic site is a historic site, not an object to be carted around for the convenience of road planners and motor cars."

Halleran's request to council to consider other options was supported by the Craigflower Women's Institute.

Institute secretary Joan Axford said the group strongly opposes any decision to move the school from its original site.

About $100,000 will be spent this year renovating the school structure and polishing the exterior.

The provincial highways ministry wants Saanich to reduce the right-of-way next to the school, but municipal engineer Cliff Warren recently told council the suggestion won't work because Admirals is designated as a major road and needs enough room to expand to four lanes.

The school sits on the bank of the Gorge waterway and houses a small public museum depicting early life in the area.

Special ferry fare to end?

Special ferry commuter fares for residents of the Gulf Islands, Sunshine Coast and Powell River District may soon be discontinued, NDP critic Don Lockstead said Monday.

"I have reason to believe the B.C. Ferry Corp. is considering doing away with the resident commuter cards," he said.

Ferries general manager Charles Gallagher has stated publicly the commuter cards should be eliminated, Lockstead said.

He said no new cards are being issued this year.

"This indicates they are seriously considering doing away with the cards."

The member for Mackenzie warned that any move to discontinue the commuter fares will bring the same sort of mass protest it sparked when the new Socred government tried it in 1976.

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said the government has made no decision about commuter fares.

Treasure stolen from convent

CHICOUTIMI, Que. (CP) — Two 15-year-olds were arrested Monday in connection with the weekend theft of a $200,000 jewel-encrusted incense-burner from a convent here.

The youths, from Alma and Chibougamau, Que., had escaped from a Chicoutimi transition centre.

Police said the thieves erected a ladder and climbed about 4.5 metres above the altar to reach the incense burner. They then broke the 19-kilogram object into little pieces and sold it for $350.

The incense burner was purchased by the Servantes Adoratrices du Saint-Sacrament in 1908 for $15,000.

Three chalices and two gold ciboriums worth a total of $20,000 also disappeared from the Eglise St. Yves in Rimouski-Est Friday night. Rimouski police are still looking for suspects.

Anti-barking bylaw stays

Rural Saanich residents asking for exemption from the municipality's barking bylaw were turned down Monday by council.

Aldermen decided to keep the controversial bylaw which penalizes owners of dogs that bark for more than 10 minutes.

A 63-name petition presented to council demanded the law not affect rural areas of the municipality. The petition said people use the bylaw to harass dog owners by constantly complaining to municipal officials.

But a pound official told council the bylaw should be enforced in rural areas as well as urban sections of Saanich.

Scanners confuse shoppers: NDP

Some B.C. consumers are already confused by the use of electronic scanners in supermarkets and many more soon will be, NDP MLA Norm Levi told the Legislature Monday.

He urged Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen to ensure that price tags are left on all items on supermarket shelves despite the use of scanners to calculate the customer's bill.

Levy estimated 250,000 British Columbians now patronize stores using scanner systems, Soon, he said, more than a million people will be affected.

"Then you're going to get some serious backlash," he warned.

"We spent the last 15 years educating consumers to shop carefully, to look at prices, to look at packaging. Then along come scanners and there are no more prices on the packages."

Lelvy suggested this province follow the lead of Quebec, which requires price stickers be maintained on all products, or Ontario, which has an informal agreement with retailers that prices will be left on.

The minister said his staf is studying the scanner situation and the Ontario and Quebec experiences will be considered in their analysis.

Pay up or . . .

Sidney businessmen who are tardy in paying business licences may soon get some public exposure.

Sidney council voted Monday to warn the firms that if payment is not made within 48 hours of receipt of notice their names will be published in the local paper.

About 10 businesses are involved.

Province's welfare share up

A $12-million reduction in the municipal share of social assistance costs was announced today by Finance Minister Hugh Curtis.

The 1980-81 portion of these costs which the province recovers from municipalities will fall to seven per cent.

Municipalities with populations greater than 2,500 have been paying 10 per cent of social assistance costs.

That would have worked out to $1.72 per capita per month. However, with the reduced rate it will stand at $1.20 per capita per month.

"This reduction will not affect provincial social assistance benefits. It merely reduces the local share of program costs," Curtis said.

Many people buy wagons in order to get increased passenger space and cargo area. But how many people ever consider the safety of the most precious cargo they'll ever carry—their families? Volvo owners do. And here's why they pay a little extra to own one.

STRUCTURAL SAFETY— IN A VOLVO, THE ODDS AREN'T STACKED AGAINST YOU.

In Volvo, a high strength steel cage surrounds a passenger compartment specifically designed to resist physical damage in a collision. Tubular steel bars, braced by a patented Volvo design protect you from side collisions.

Special "crumple zones" built into a Volvo's frame reduce impact forces which act on the passenger compartment. Steel profiles built into the roof keep you covered. And the six box-shaped steel pillars which support the roof are also designed to support the weight of six more Volvos.

VOLVO FAMILIES ARE HAPPY FAMILIES.

Statistics have already shown that 9 out of 10 Volvo owners are happy with their cars. Because Volvos also offer high levels of quality, reliability, comfort, performance and handling. Things not generally associated with station wagons.

So before you buy a wagon, stop in at our Volvo showroom. We may be able to offer you something you value as much as your family's safety—value for your family's money.

Strokes for the Anglos

MONTREAL — It was said in jest and it drew a laugh but the throwaway line unfortunately contained the essence of a province in turmoil.

Economic Development Minister Bernard Landry was being questioned by man in a dark sweater who interrupted the minister's response.

The charming Landry, dashing in his blue velvet suit, said quickly, "Let me answer, please. Otherwise I'll switch to French."

The large man shook his head in rueful acknowledgement, just as the Anglophone community he represents is approaching the Quebec "separendum" with sad resignation.

This was the Parti Quebecois' day-long commune with the beleaguered Anglophones of Montreal, Rene Levesque and six of his senior ministers venturing into the heart of Waspland, a ninth-floor ballroom of the venerable Sheraton-Mount Royal, mere blocks down the mountain slope where the hardy survivors of Westmount still cling.

In fact, the Anglophones declined to join battle, perhaps still stunned by the clear PQ propaganda victory in the referendum debate in the National Assembly, with Claude Ryan for the first time clearly on the defensive.

Sunday's 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. talk-fest with a relay team of PQ ministers and Levesque himself was sponsored by something called the Committee of Anglophones for Sovereignty-Association and their followers dominated the gathering of 500.

The official PQ photographer scurried about, snapping everyone for official preservation, reminding me for all the world of those plain-clothes Mounties who photograph demonstrators at protest rallies. The blue-and-white "Oui Love Quebec" referendum stickers decorated too many lapels and the Levesque men were handled gently and politely in the question sessions.

The bitter ones stayed away, like the columnist in the Sunday Express English-language tabloid who referred to those attending as "Anglophone Quislings.'

That's pretty strong stuff and it was clear that the Pequistes, having won the televised war of words in the National Assembly, wanted this as a catharsis to sooth all those Anglos who didn't dare attend but would get the message through this carefully-prepared media event.

The CBC, to co-operate, sent more than 100 emissaries for its myriad missions and the Levesque pacifier, which wound up the day, was carried live on local TV.

The PQ aim to sooth and stroke the Anglophones now that it has gained the momentum in the "separendum" struggle was made clear by the previously-fearsome Dr. Camille Laurin, when he said he had never embarked "on a more difficult task" than he had in attempting to convince this audience how French speaking-Quebecers have become much more secure now that they have regained control of their own culture.

Denis Lazure, the minister of social affairs who is the other psychiatrist in the cabinet along with Laurin, said Quebec was the most tolerant government in Canada today.

Levesque himself — carefully sticking to notes, as he admitted — emphasized his opening: "My dear fellow Quebecers."

His concern was in calming the fears of Anglophones. "We all live here together and will continue the morning after."

Levesque's great gift is for the telling phrase and he cautioned both sides against using words that would leave "permanent psychic scars."

Though "we hope to win it, we want to win it and we expect to win it," the referendum result would produce "neither a mythical heaven nor a nightmarish hell."

With an austere Laurin seated at the same table, Levesque said he has been personally humiliated by the need for legislation on "our own language in our own homeland" and, he promised, there would be no need for "restrictive" language laws in a sovereign Quebec.

At that, he tensely reached across a companion and six mikes to shake Laurin's hand. Dr. Laurin lit up a cigarette.

The marathon love-in confirmed the PQ mastery over communications but the best question of the day came from Ron Fisher, a 44-year-old Chateauguay welder who interrupted his usual Sunday at the harness races to demand of Laurin:

"I'm a simple man with a simple question and I hope I can get a simple answer. Believe it or not, I love Quebec as much as you do. How come I can't say Yes to Quebec without saying No to Canada?"

No one really answered him that one.

Bridge guarded by tug escorts

VANCOUVER (UPC) — The Port of Vancouver has issued tough new regulations for deep-sea vessels aimed at preventing a repeat of last fall's ramming of a vital rail bridge across Burrard Inlet.

Harbormaster Capt. Henry Vondette said Monday two tugboats will accompany every deep-sea ship through the Second Narrows Channel in the inlet to help control the movement and alignment of the vessel to minimize the risk of a collision.

Vondette also said such vessels will not be allowed through the narrows without a visibility range of at least 2.4 kilometers to the east and 1.6 kilometers to the west of the Canadian National Railways bridge. Ships must travel at speeds of less than eight knots unless there is an emergency.

Shipping industry spokesmen were critical of the new regulations, however, claiming compulsory tug escorts will add $3,000 to the cost of each transit, but would have little effect in the event of an emergency.

The extra cost to ship owners will also increase the economic edge of Vancouver wharves over terminals in Port Moody and Burnaby, further along Burrard Inlet.

The need for such precautions stemmed from the ineident in which the freighter Japan Erica rammed the bridge in a heavy fog Oct. 12, severing the vital rail link for western Canadian grain shipments for four months.

The loss of the bridge also hampered the movement of sulphur, potash, coal and lumber shipments, and repairs to the bridge cost more than $7 million.

In another matter related to the bridge-smashing incident, the Pacific Pilotage Authority was asked Monday to reconsider the disciplinary action it took against the pilot aboard the Japan Erica.

Pilotage authority chairman John Evans said he received a letter from Gordon Sinclair, administrator of the Canadian marine transportation administration, asking the authority to reconsider its decision not to hold an inquiry into the competence of the pilot, Merril T. Jones.

The authority instead decided to end the matter with a letter of censure to Jones and a "strong personal reprimand."

Evans said the board would discuss the matter at a meeting next week.

Restaurateur wins $1M

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Cranbrook restaurant owner has won $1 million in the March 16 Super Loto draw, the B.C. Lotteries Branch announced Monday.

Neil Wong, 37, said he discovered the win last week but because of poor weather could not fly to Winnipeg to collect his winnings until Monday.

Wong said he and his wife will invest the majority of their winnings.

Japanese to build Burrard dry dock

NORTH VANCOUVER (UPC) — The federal government Monday gave formal approval to two Japanese companies to construct a $63-million dry dock in the Burrard Yarrows shipyards.

"With the establishment of a new dry dock and related ship repair facilities, the West coast will be fully competitive with other facilities," said B.C. Sen. Ray Perrault, who signed the contract with Mitsubishi Ltd. and Nissho-Iwai Ltd.

The dock, already under construction, will handle ships up to 115,000 tonnes when completed in 1982, up from the current handling capacity of 16,000 tonnes. The project is expected to create 300 permanent jobs.

Woman not up to work: boss

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cold storage plant manager told a sex discrimination inquiry Monday he feared that Susan Jorgensen, 24, would be hurt if she continued to perform a job normally done by men.

Geoff Leyland of British Columbia Ice and Cold Storage, said he saw Ms. Jorgensen standing some distance away from her ordinary work area holding her back.

"I asked her the problem and she said her back was bothering her," he replied, adding that she had said she could go back to the job and did.

On another occasion, he said, she asked him to tape her wrist.

Ms. Jorgensen complained in the summer of 1977, she was refused a job in an all-male classification. She said the company refused to pay her the same rate as men doing the same jobs.

The company claims Ms. Jorgensen is physically incapable of doing the work.

Result of the inquiry could affect the pay of 2,500 women in the fishing industry.

Ms. Jorgensen has testified she had no problems keeping pace with her fellow employees.

In reply to a question from Jack Nicol, president of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, Leyland said he had not seen anyone else holding his or her back as if in pain to the same extent as Ms. Jorgensen.

Leyland agreed Ms. Jorgensen performed a key role in fish tally work but did not feel that qualified her for Grade 1 work, (automatic grade for males). At the time, Grade 1 paid 65 cents an hour more than Grade 2. Leyland said no male employee who worked more than 1000 hours had not been classified Grade 1.

Company lawyer Thomas A. Roper asked the plant manager if he would have reached a different decision had a male employee been involved. Leyland said he would not.

The inquiry continues.

Homeowners' recruit

At least one federal government cabinet minister is listening to the swelling numbers of disgruntled homeowners mobilizing to protest rising interest rates.

Unfortunately he is not the minister with the financial clout, the man who to date has appeared disinterested in the plight of a growing number of Canadians who face losing their homes or walking a financial tightrope to keep them.

Public Works Minister Paul Cosgrove, also responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, says he hopes to introduce a plan to relieve the effects of rising interest rates on lower income families. After meeting with officials from Peel County in Ontario, he says he likes their proposal for tax credits based on income and the difference between the inflation rate and mortgage rates.

Cosgrove says it is not unlike a plan the Liberal caucus kicked around while it was in opposition. "I hope to have some action, some relief before April 14."

For the hundred of people across Canada, including Victoria, who are adding muscle to a Mississauga car salesman's campaign to have Ottawa lower first mortgage rates to between 12 and 14 per cent, Cosgrove may sound like a bit of a messiah.

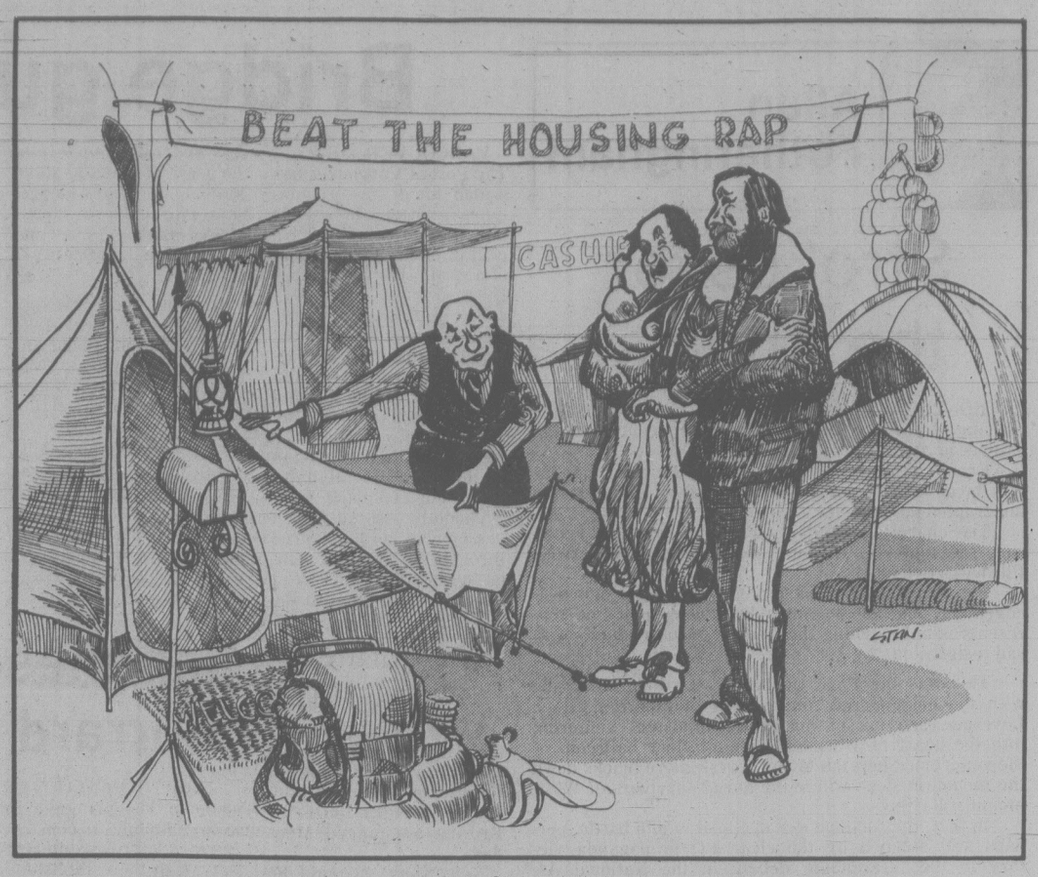
But it's Finance Minister Allan MacEachen who holds the purse strings and so far he's holding them with a tight clutch.

Last week he reinforced a previous statement in which he said mortgage interest relief was not inevitable. Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller and Housing Minister Claude Bennett approached him to ask about a co-ordinated federal-provincial program to soften the impact of interest rates. After the meeting MacEachen said no decisions had been made, no proposals had been presented to cabinet.

As Cosgrove and MacEachen beam along on different wavelengths, Canadians renewing mortgages are facing increases in their monthly payments of as much as 35 per cent. CMHC says the numbers defaulting on mortgages because they can't afford the interest rates is bound to increase. And the Canadian housing industry is in its worst slump since the Depression.

In picking up the cause of homeowners, Cosgrove would be wise not to neglect the growing shortage of rental accommodation that has hit southerwestern B.C. particularly hard.

By the sounds of it, he will need all the housing horror stories he can muster if he is going to move MacEachen in a direction that will ease the country's shelter crisis.



"This model has a non-renewable 24 per cent mortgage, no payments till June.

Closing the loopholes

Liberal Health and Welfare Minister Monique Begin suggested last weekend that the government should close up tax loopholes that benefit mostly the rich. The money saved, she said, should be put towards increased social programs, such as a doubling of the child tax credit for needy families.

It sounds simple, but the government should be very wary of adopting such a scheme.

The problem does not, in most cases, lie with the idea of closing up tax loopholes. Undoubtedly dozens of them have been created over the years, on purpose or by accident. Undoubtedly federal revenue would increase by billions of dollars annually if they were closed.

The over-all effect on the economy would probably be better if loopholes that now benefit individuals or exporting corporations were closed rather than those that benefit domestic corporations.

The main difficulty with Begin's proposal, however, is her desire to use the money to expand social programs. Recent studies show that one of the main causes of the $12 billion annual federal deficit is the erosion of the tax base during the past decade, through the creation of indexing programs, special exemptions, and other loopholes.

It seems logical, then, that the closing of those loopholes is the best way to increase the government's revenue to reduce the deficit. If the money raised by closing the loopholes is used for expanded social programs, the government will have no alternative methods for lowering the deficit other than substantial across-the-board tax increases or substantial reductions in other services.

It is not the time to expand federally-funded social programs when the government has an annual deficit of $12 billion. Money that can be found through closing tax loopholes without hurting the economy should go towards reducing the deficit.

In the long run, it will do all the people of Canada more good.

Peace policies

We were pleased to hear Mr. Trudeau say, in his victory speech that he intends to emphasize a peacemaker role for Canada.

We hope that Canada will again lead the way in offering innovative solutions to world problems as it did when Lester Pearson proposed the first peacekeeping force. We suggest that the time has come to place peacemaking on a permanent basis, with a training centre in Canada where member states of the United Nations could send their troops for training.

We suggest that Canada should support the establishment of a University for Peace, proposed by Costa Rica and approved by the General Assembly in December, to train peacemakers to act in a conciliatory role between parties in conflict. The Secretary-General should be provided with funds to establish a Secretariat of Peace immediately, to use the services of skilled peacemakers now available. Kurt Waldheim's efforts to find a solution to the current crisis in Iran are commendable, but he should be supported by a permanent staff, rather than being required to act on an ad hoc basis, as at present.

Canada should support the efforts of its European allies to develop a plan for a neutral Afghanistan, in consultation with the governments of that country and its neighbors.

We believe that the plans to purchase new fighter planes from abroad should be dropped. The planes are obsolete, useless in a nuclear war and the purchase would be inflationary. We prefer to see our money and efforts devoted to removing the causes of war, through disarmament and other means, rather than expanding our weapons capacity and contributing to the arms race. A review of defence and external affairs policies should be given priority, with a view to developing a minimum defence establishment and a maximum effort for peace.

Nuclear missiles should be removed from Canadian bases, as Mr. Trudeau pledged in 1978, and our boundary waters should be declared nuclear-free.

Reduced spending on war-related activities would release funds to create jobs for Canadians and to assist Third World efforts to establish a New International Economic Order. Arms sales to the Third World should be stopped in a world where all peoples have the right to live in peace without fear of economic exploitation, political oppression and war.

We have written to the Prime Minister to this effect, and suggest that those of your readers who are interested in living in a more peaceful world could do so too. — Edith Adamson, the Victoria Coalition for Disarmament.

Keep farmland

It is no myth at all that B.C.'s arable land is slowly but steadily diminishing every day. Houses, apartments and business establishments are sprouting up where once grass, trees and other vegetation flourished, especially vegetation which is necessary to feed an ever expanding population. Many people will scoff at the fear of arable land being consumed by asphalt, concrete and steel; nevertheless, those same scoffers will quite likely complain about the lofty cost of imported food.

The time is definitely here when the citizenry of B.C. must strive for a sound, long-range, productive agricultural system or succumb to a monstrous urbanism which will devour its denizens as surely as a starving giant will gobble up a handful of peanuts.

Anyone concerned about food must hope the agriculturists, conservationists and economists here in B.C. will amalgamate their expertise to ensure B.C.'s arable land is used for food and nothing else. — J. Wickstrom, 3264 Shelley Street.

Hodson memorial

Following the suggestion from one of her former students that a scholorship be offered in memory of the late Mrs. Hazel Hodson a fund has now been set up.

Anyone interested, who wishes to contribute is asked to send their donation to Margaret Sanson, 209-1144 Rockland Ave., Victoria, B.C. V8V 3H7. All donations will be placed in a trust fund in the Royal Bank, 1102 Fort Street, called The Hazel Hodson Memorial Scholarship Fund.

As Mrs. Hodson's ability as a teacher of French is well known to many Victorians the scholarship will be awarded this June to a student in Victoria Senior Secondary who has shown outstanding work in French. — Margaret H. Sanson, 209-1144 Rockland Avenue.

More for cycles

I am a motorcycle rider, and as such was annoyed by two separate occurrences recently.

First, I noticed Mr. Curtis' laudable attempts to promote energy conservation go so far as to give fuel-efficient cars a two per cent break on the sales tax. The most fuel-efficient vehicles on the road right now, motorcycles, were completely ignored. Why do they not get a break?

Secondly, March 9 marked the "Daytona 200" Motorcycle Race in Florida; the largest motorcycle road race in North America. I eagerly scanned the next day's sport pages to get the results of the race, but could find not even the slightest mention that the race had taken place. Contrary to what you may think, there are a lot of motorcycle riders in Victoria, and some of us can even read.

I wish both your sports writers and our grateful government would wake up to the fact of our existence. — Adrian Chaster, Victoria.

No vote will weaken chances for reform: Morin

Second of a series

QUEBEC — During the national assembly debate on the referendum question last week, FP News Service spoke with Claude Morin, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in the Parti Quebecois government and chief architect of his party's referendum strategy.

It was Morin who convinced the PQ in 1974 to seek power first and deal with independence later by means of a referendum. The strategy paid off handsomely in the 1976 provincial election when the PQ won power without talking about independence.

Over the last three years, Morin has been responsible for the PQ's 'soft-sell' approach to Quebec sovereignty, stressing continuity with the rest of Canada through an economic association.

He is also largely responsible for the 'soft' question the PQ is posing in the spring referendum. The question announced last December was a surprise to most observers because it suddenly promised not one referendum but two. The first would seek a mandate for negotiations, while the second would be used to approve any changes in Quebec's political status resulting from those talks.

Morin has been criticized by radicals in the PQ for being too moderate on independence. If the referendum is defeated, he may be the first cabinet minister to suffer.

No one but two

Morin, 50, has 20 years of experience in federal-provincial matters, having served as a top adviser to four Quebec premiers before his conversion to the PQ cause.

FP: One of the major arguments of the Liberal opposition is that the whole referendum exercise would have had much more significance if there had been a consensus of all the parties on the wording of the question. This would have made the referendum a much more historic event and the weight of the decision would have been greater.

MORIN: In a sense that is true, but I want to qualify that right away by saying that the opposition would like us to ask the kind of question we would lose. The problem is we are firmly convinced that the question we are asking is consistent with the step-by-step approach we have taken over the years. In other words ... the opposition would like us to ask the question which may come in the second referendum, instead of the one which should normally come in the first one.

FP: You do not think there was a to dismiss a 'yes' result as a weak, wishy-washy mandate?

MORIN: Well, you see if this referendum didn't mean anything, nobody would pay any attention to it. On the contrary, you're asking me questions about it, which means there is an interest in the rest of Canada on what's going on in Quebec. Whatever the result is, it will mean something to English Canada. We are relying on it so that the people in the rest of Canada understand that we really want a new agreement with them. I hope they will understand that because that will be the real message that the referendum is going to give, if there is a 'yes' answer, of course.

Western Canada

FP: Your government wants a new partnership with the rest of Canada. Why then, have you and other ministers visited Western Canada so infrequently to explain sovereignty-association?

MORIN: I think you are partly right in saying that we haven't gone there enough and haven't explained ourselves enough. I am partly guilty of that although I have been there a couple of times, making speeches in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. But we didn't go there enough. After the referendum is over, and there is a 'yes' answer like I think there will be, there will be much more interest ... until now there was a tendency (in the west) not to believe we could win it. But a 'yes' will give cause for interest in the rest of Canada and I think we will start some kind of a — I wouldn't say goodwill campaign — but we will pay more attention.

FP: By not explaining your option outside Quebec, you make it seem that sovereignty-association is designed purely for internal consumption by the Quebec voters.

MORIN: This is not true. I think that sovereignty-association is absolutely normal and called for and I believe in it sincerely ... it is not true that it is only for internal consumption.

FP: The polls show that Quebec anglophones, who are massively opposed to your option, hold the balance of power in the referendum. Would the PQ blame a referendum defeat on Quebec anglophones?

MORIN: I never use that argument. I hope not. I know quite well that the anglophone group in Quebec is solidly behind the 'no', which is in a way understandable. If they looked into our option more, maybe they would understand that we are not trying to push them out of Quebec. Quebec is still going to be the place in Canada where linguisitc minorities are going to be in a much better situation than anywhere else in Canada, even if Quebec becomes a sovereign state. So there is no fear in a 'yes' answer. But I understand the normal reflex would be to give a 'no' answer. Still, I hope that there will be enough French-speaking votes so that we don't have to face that particular problem you are now mentioning.

FP: Why is the PQ attacking the Liberal beige paper (on constitutional reform) when it is not on the ballot?

MORIN: It is not on the ballot but it is there in the background and in the political landscape. We are going to talk about it because it is supposedly going to be the option that will work if ours doesn't. We have to judge it and we are going to talk about it. I personally am going to use it all over the place, all over Quebec, all the time.

FP: The Liberal document has been favorably accepted in most of Canada, while your white paper has not. Doesn't this make your position more difficult?

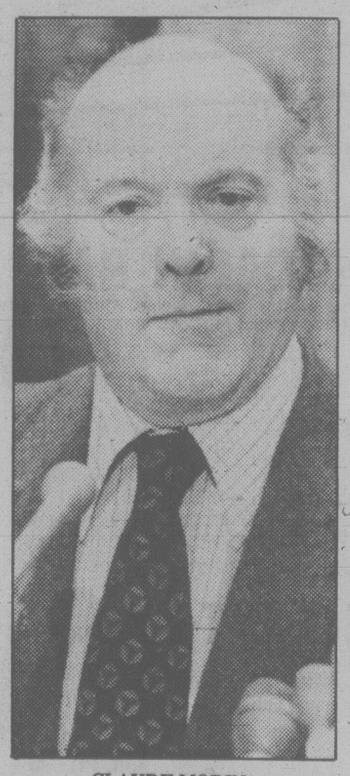
MORIN: Superficially, yes you're right, except when you look at the type of approval the beige paper receives; it is pretty similar to the approval the Pepin-Robarts report received — meaning good words and no action. Let me use as an example the Federal Council the Liberals are possibility of achieving consensus on the wording?

MORIN: There would have been a possibility if the opposition would have accepted ... that first there is a referendum on a mandate for negotiations and then, depending on the results, there is another referendum that settles the political status of Quebec. They didn't want that. They would have liked us to ask the question that is normally going to apply to the second referendum.

Desperate move

FP: Is the promise of a second referendum a desperate move by the government to win a 'yes' vote at any cost?

MORIN: No. I don't think so because personally, I always took for granted that there was an underlying principle that we don't act without the people accepting that we go ahead, and this meant that the people would have to accompany us through the entire process. Since it's only a mandate for negotiations we are seeking now, we have to come back with another referendum on the results of the negotiations. It was not a desperate move; of course it hadn't been spelled out before and that is why some people didn't expect it. We have the right to proceed any way we want.



CLAUDE MORIN
... author of soft sell

FP: Haven't you given an excuse to English Canada's political leaders proposing to replace the Senate. ... There is no agreement, I underline no agreement anywhere in Canada now on what could replace the Senate and this holds true for the Federal Council Mr. Ryan has been proposing. Mind you, this Federal Council is the kingpin of his constitutional proposals and it has been rejected so far by Alberta, it has also been rejected by Hatfield in New Brunswick and no one has committed himself to specifics and this is quite significant as far as I'm concerned. In Quebec, it may look like there has been some kind of approval in the rest of Canada on that Liberal document but people will pretty soon understand that this approval is nothing significant.

FP: Would the Parti Quebecois be split by a referendum defeat?

MORIN: Well, a defeat never helps anyone, but I don't think there will be a defeat ... I think there is some kind of upsurge in our ranks and in our option. I have no proof of that but we sense and feel it all over Quebec. I have been attending meetings all over Quebec and there is sort of a revival going on.

FP: How did you come to support Quebec sovereignty and what is the significance to you of a 'yes' vote in the referendum?

MORIN: (excerpted from March 12, 1980 speech during the referendum debate in the national assembly): "... Canada has never been an enemy in my eyes and I can not imagine it ever becoming one. My choice was never meant as a reproach to English Canadians for their way of seeing things, even less as an indication that I detested them as a collectivity. I simply understood that it was the system that was wrong, not Canadians and Quebecers.

My final conclusion was that the Quebec-Canada link had to be reorganized on another basis. I realized that Quebec had to replace the present system with another while recognizing, of course, the rest of Canada's freedom to maintain for itself a federalism that suited it ...

I did not become a sovereignist through ideology or sentiment, but through experience, not through taste but through duty. I did not become a sovereignist to isolate myself at home because I was afraid of others. I did so because I could no longer accept that my nation, as I have said so often, should be more or less subtly controlled and supervised by another. That of course does not prevent me from recognizing that we all live in an interdependent world where sovereignty can and should be completed by association between equals and cooperation among nations. I would even go so far as to say that if I had thought the equality of Quebecers could be possible in the present system, I would not be here today. If I am here, it is not because I like politics but because I made a wager with myself that the Quebec people really want to be masters in their own house without animosity towards others ...

Canada's response

(The Liberals) are trying to make us believe that a No in the referendum would incite the rest of Canada to say Yes to reforms which for years they have been rejecting. If I've learned one lesson from experience, it is that if Quebecers started to retreat themselves, the rest of Canada would be in no hurry to arrest the motion or to open new perspectives which Quebecers would be closing for themselves. In short the real risk is to vote No, because a No, no matter what anyone says or what slogan it is wrapped in, will weaken us. On the day of the referendum I will listen to the response of Quebecers and accept it, whatever it is. It is for them and not for me to decide if they want to be what they can be.

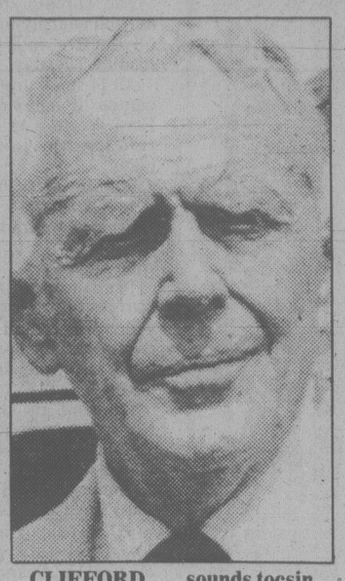
'U.S. still fighting World War II'

WILLIAM GREIDER
The Washington Post

The most powerful political idea of our time, surely, is the idea of World War II. For here we are, nearly 40 years later, and the World War II experience is still controlling American policy, still defining "national security" in a false and dangerous manner, raising brave banners and launching the wrong ships.

The junior officers from World War II, it has been said, run American politics and policy. They do still, inspired by their complicated memory of that great struggle.

The memory is moralistic: America restores right in the world, at great sacrifice. It is also cynical: The might of arms, of industrial mass, conquers all before it. And vigilant: America will not be tricked again; next time we will out-trick the enemy. And glorious: The finest hours of American memory are connected to wars and this was the finest war of all.



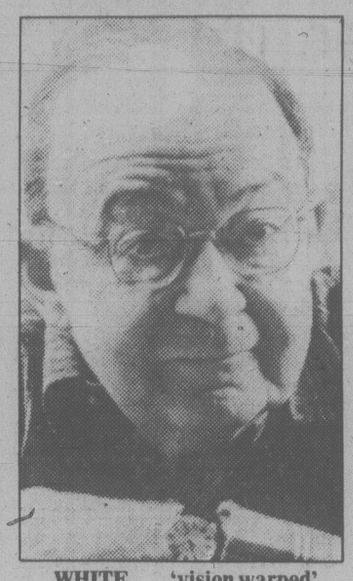
CLIFFORD . . . sounds tocsin

For a few brief years, after the disgrace in Indochina, when revisionist inquiries were exposing the crimes of the CIA and other action arms of the national-security state, it seemed that, perhaps, the World War II mindset was finally in eclipse. New premises for American world policy would surely emerge, now that the old premises were so tarnished with misspent blood and treasure.

Not to be. Probably not in our lifetime. As old warriors pass from the political scene, they are replaced by new ones, young warrior clones who embrace the same reassuring premises which made Americans feel so good about themselves when they were fighting the Axis.

Unleash the CIA to do its magic on the nations who misbehave. What magic? Don't ask. It's a secret.

Pump up the defence budget by a fixed annual percentage to show the world we mean business. This is a spiritual gesture, like a great national tithe to the Church of Deterrence.



WHITE . . . 'vision warped'

Send out more flags, deploy more troops, get ready before the shooting starts. When the shooting does start, Americans will be there. Count on it.

If these Cold War policies seem comfortably familiar to American citizens, it is because they are the same policies which have reigned for 30 years — first enunciated in 1947-48 by Harry Truman when Clark Clifford was a young man on his staff. The other day, Clark Clifford the elder was on Capitol Hill before a Senate committee, sounding the tocsin again, recalling the advance of Hitler in the 1930s and urging the nation to new vigilance against the Soviets in the Persian Gulf.

The coincidence reminded me of an old commencement speech somewhere in my files, an address delivered by Clark Clifford in 1978 at Loyola College. The senior wise man of Washington was explaining to the young audience how powerful is the memory of World War II and how it can blind national leaders.

"The war in Vietnam was a disaster.

"It is clear to me now, in retrospect, that we made a fundamental error in becoming involved. The tragedy is that the hard-won lessons we had learned in Europe, involving the Germans and then the Soviets, were misapplied in Southeast Asia.

"What we thought was a monopolistic conspiracy to spread communism and crush freedom in Southeast Asia turned out not to be so. As the picture clarified over time, we could recognize that the war in Vietnam was fundamentally a civil war and not naked aggression. The Soviet Union and Red China, instead of being allies, turned out to be adversaries.

"Our country's leaders, in their anxiety not to repeat the mistakes of the past, interpreted the struggle as requiring the intervention of the United States to prevent a much larger and more costly conflict."

I do not want to be unfair to Clifford. The Persian Gulf is not another Indochina; it is a quite different situation, many times more complicated and threatening to America. Still, I have to say it scares me when the Clark Cliffords of Washington reach for their Hitler memories and ask the rest of us to trust the clarity of their vision. Frankly, I think this generation of men still sees the world in terms of their own brave youth. But, alas, the world has changed.

The Persian Gulf of 1980 is not Vietnam of 1964 but it is not Western Europe of 1938 either. Clifford is smart enough to know that invoking Hitler summons forth in American policy makers — not to mention the public — a befogging collection of reflexes, the idealistic and the cynical impulses of World War II. If these reflexes are applied with America's usual gusto to the oil states of the Middle East, I predict pure disaster for us.

If the United States, as our leaders suggest, is rushing to the aid of small and helpless nations who are threatened by the Soviets, why do these small and helpless nations shrink from our embrace? Is it perhaps because these emerging nations fear American dominion nearly as much as the Soviet version?

What is the true nature of Islam emerging at this hour of history? We are all ignorant. Yet the simultaneous expression of reform and reaction in these Islamic rebellions seems at least as relevant to our future as the study of Soviet intentions.

Whose side are we on? The revival of "containment" as the regional strategy for the Middle East may comfort the old warriors but it tends to obliterate the real complexities.

How, indeed, do we support our friends? The Cold War approach, with few exceptions, has been to indulge them. We consistently support "free world" leaders in their excesses, blink at their crimes, ignore their political rivals. One can see the end result of that approach in Vietnam, Iran, Nicaragua. Are we now entering a phase where the same indulgent approach leads to a bad ending in Saudi Arabia or, for that matter, in Israel?

Hard questions, without simple answers. Our complicated struggle in the Persian Gulf is not nearly as satisfying as the great war to defeat fascism. That is what seems so scandalous about the revivalist atmosphere of Washington these days — the easy way in which old men who should know better are opting for the absolutism of their youth.

TRUMAN . . . policies remain

I found another graduation speech in my files, alongside Clifford's, this one delivered last spring at Harvard by the author Theodore H. White. Before his fame as the premier story-teller of American politics, White wrote stirring history-as-it-happened from China and Europe, during those years of war and peacemaking. Like Clifford, he now sees that his generation was, in part, misled by its own great triumphs.

Last spring, he gave the Harvard seniors this warning:

"We came out of that war in 1945 with a sense of mastery, of control over events, and with what one of my classmates, Arthur Schlesinger, a licensed historian, called 'The Politics of Hope.' There was an entire country ready to be remade, reshaped, reformed. If I sound my true note here for the first time, a note of melancholy, it is because I hope that you in your time do not suffer the same fate that befell us.

"That fate was to have everything we hoped for, struggled for, yearned for — come about, and come true. And then to see those visions warped, distorted, and made grotesque in their execution."

The Greeks would understand the outlines of tragedy in this. Does a great nation, like a tragic hero, fall victim to its own triumphant nature, an overweening pride that blinds it to realities? Could that happen to us?

Vogel: The real issue remains

THE VANCOUVER SUN
An Editorial

The painstaking defence of deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel by his boss, Allan Williams, unfortunately does not bring the affair to a satisfactory close.

In rebutting the CBC's allegations that Mr. Vogel influenced or tried to influence the course of justice, Mr. Williams made a convincing argument for his deputy's integrity and lack of improper motive. But that is not the only issue.

The central issue is, to use the attorney-general's own words, the public apprehension of "the credibility of the criminal justice system and the standard of performance of those who are charged with its administration." That is the test against which Mr. Williams measured the CBC telecast and found it wanting.

Our opinion is that as a demonstration of Mr. Vogel's suitability for his job, the attorney-general's report does not meet his own demanding test.

In one of the cases raised — that of the drinking-driving charge against Andrew Rigg — the report shows Mr. Vogel admitted making an error in judgment when he rejected the prosecutor's advice and stopped an appeal against the young man's acquittal.

Although Mr. Williams refuted the claim that the Rigg family enjoyed Mr. Vogel's close friendship, it's clear the Riggs were personally known to him. Mr. Williams did not dispute the suggestion in a letter from the senior prosecutor that Mr. Vogel was "a close associate" of the accused's lawyer, nor did he attempt to explain Mr. Vogel's odd statement that an appeal would have been a "burden" to the lawyer.

Surely a deputy attorney-general properly sensitive to public perception of the fairness of the justice system would never have allowed himself to get into a position where he would make a judgment call on a case involving a personal acquaintance represented by a lawyer who was a close associate.

In the Wendy King case, where it was reported that Mr. Vogel said he would "stay the subpoena" if former chief justice John Farris was called as a witness, Mr. Williams established that Mr. Vogel was only offering a "lawyer's opinion" and that a subpoena was, in fact, later served on Mr. Farris.

But could anyone in the delicate position of deputy attorney-general afford the luxury of a lawyer's opinion, or speak as if he had the authority to freeze a court order, without risking the impairment of public confidence in the administration of justice and the independence of the courts — especially in a case so susceptible to rumor and touching what the prosecutor called "the highest level in our society"?

Mr. Williams' inquiries revealed no direct contact between Mr. Vogel and any of the prosecutors involved in the case against Mickey Moran, although questions about the case remain. Like others that deserve satisfactory answers, they would be better handled by an independent public inquiry. But even as it is, the attorney-general's internal review shows Mr. Vogel's "standard of performance" to have been less than satisfactory.

While he may not have consciously interfered with the course of justice, he showed poor judgment and a lack of sensitivity to the need for public confidence. Added to the earlier finding of an appeal court judge that he acted inappropriately and showed insufficient respect for the court in another case, that suggests that Mr. Vogel, however honorable, is unsuited to the job he holds.

It may be too much to expect Mr. Vogel to resign while he is defending his honor through a libel action. He must, of course, not be restricted in any way from exercising his right to his day in court; it is patently unfair already that he is being made to wait for it by a bad law requiring 90 days' notice of a suit against a crown corporation. It might be best, however, if Mr. Williams were to take him out of the line of fire and give him some more suitable duties.

You could look it up

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Watching Jimmy Carter and his economics philosophers sitting at the depot waiting for Old Man Hard Times to roll in, takes me back to my childhood, which is getting to be a right good spell ago.

It's true, Father William, I am so old that I can remember 1931, 1932, 1933. Even remember Herbert Hoover. Not very clearly, mind you. Nobody's that old anymore. But I remember him vaguely. Chubby-jowled fellow with dimples, nice face — like Jimmy Carter in that department, though it was sweet and avuncular rather than smiley nice.

Like Carter, Hoover also had a bad economic problem, consisting of the entire country being broke. The average wage for people who had jobs in 1932, and there weren't an awful lot of them, was about $16.25 (I'm not old enough to remember that; had to look it up).

In any case, what I do remember, and very clearly, was everybody from Hoover on down sitting at the depot waiting for prosperity to roll in. "Prosperity is just around the corner," they all said.

They sat there saying it through 1931 when things were terribly unprosperous and kept on saying it through 1932 when things were getting worse. And, of course, prosperity wasn't just around the corner. It wasn't even down in the next neighborhood. It wasn't even in town, and might never have showed up at all if World War Two hadn't come along eight or nine years later.

The old saw has it that history, in repeating itself, comes around the second time as farce. Thus, while Hoover's America was on the rocks for lack of money, Carter's is headed that way because of too much money.

There is so much money that nobody respects it anymore. It's like sand on a beach. When you get that much money lying around, it takes all the fun out of greed. People get bored with money. To perk them up, you have to tempt them with the metal in your bridgework.

Hoover's problem was to get more money on the beach, and his people kept saying there would be plenty more out there before long. "Prosperity is just around the corner."

Carter's problem is to rescue money's reputation from the disgrace it has suffered as a result of making itself too available.

His solution to this, heartily endorsed by most Democrats, is to bring back hard times, on the theory that if enough people can't lay hands on money, people who can will show more respect for it, and the country will avoid the rocks.

In short, where Hoover needed a boom to end the depression, Carter now finds himself in the absurd position of needing a depression to end the boom. Of course, we don't say "depression" anymore, although the word was originally coined as a sissified euphemism. Hoover — I had to look this up, too — decided to call the post-1929 event a "depression" because he thought it sounded less alarming than a precise descriptive term such as "financial crisis."

HOOVER . . . around the corner

Nowadays these things are called "recessions" because "recession" sounds less alarming etcetera.

The strange thing about the "recession" this time around, however, is that the prosperity won't go away. It's been a year or more now since the imminent arrival of "recession" was announced.

It was originally scheduled for last fall, but never showed up. Christmas came; no "recession." Wait until after the new year starts, the station agent said. January 1 came, and February 1. No "recession."

Where was the "recession"? Just around the corner, if you believed the economists. When it arrived, a lot of people would know what poor was once again, though not so keenly as in Hoover's time (fingers crossed under the table here), and the dollar would have its honor restored.

Nightly in the television news and matutinally in the newspapers we are assured that the latest economic arithmetic leaves no doubt that the "recession" is really, honestly on its way for sure this time. Maybe it is, though they have been promising it for months while it refused to come.

When — if — it comes, there will be hard times. You have to be old enough to remember Herbert Hoover to enjoy history's gift for taking a bow as farce. In time of hardship we all waited for prosperity, having been assured that prosperity was just around the corner.

Fifty years later, with prosperity galore, we pine for the hardship that refuses to arrive while Carter and his boys urge us to hang on. Their slogan could be almost the same as Hoover's: "Austerity is just around the corner."

How the worm doth turn. How like unto Hoover Republicans have become our gallant Democrats.

Night sittings at whim SC chance to get even?

By JAKE BANKY

For more than a week the strange birds that inhabit the legislature have been twittering over rumors the government plans to cancel the usual twice-a-week night sittings.

The decision rests with government house leader Garde Gardom.

Asked Monday whether night sittings will continue, Gardom replied: "Yes and no."

Pressed for clarification, he indicated MLAs will have to wait until adjournment of the afternoon debate on Tuesdays and Thursdays to find out if they will be sitting that night.

What Gardom didn't say is this new uncertainty is another way of punishing the NDP for refusing to agree to a "pairing" system for the session.

Without pairing, government ministers are kept on a short leash. They can't go travelling for fear the government will run short of warm bodies in the house and the opposition will win a vote.

The move to cut most, if not all, night sittings would also have the effect of extending the session through the summer.

Premier Bennett has said he doesn't care how long the session runs. But an all-summer legislative sweat-shop would be just as unpopular with Socred backbenchers as with the opposition.

Hotels and motels in Victoria will soon boost rates for the tourist season and MLAs look much like tourists when it comes to charging them extra.

Also affected by a no-nights, all-summer session are the dozens of sessional staff hired for the duration.

The 46 sergeant-at-arms attendants are wondering how they will juggle their working hours. Members of the Press Gallery are wondering when they will manage to get away on vacation.

Get in gear or quit, SC told

An election challenge was trumpeted in the legislature Monday by Ernie Hall (NDP-Surrey) as he summed up the opposition's attack on the government's $5.8-billion budget.

"It's about time this bunch either made up its mind to be the government and get on with running this province, or get out of the way and let somebody else do it who can," Hall said.

"If they can't get on with the business of running the province then let's have an election and decide, once and for all, who should be doing the job."

Hall referred to recent polls which showed the NDP well ahead of the Socreds.

"There was a public opinion poll taken this February in the form of a general election. I noted where a lot of the votes went. I noted our gains," Hall said.

He deplored the lack of legislation in the first month of the session.

"There is a desultory air about the place. The government shows no inclination to get on with any plans. All we hear are the fights of 1975 — the catcalls about what we did between 1972 and 1975.

"It's time the public realized there is little going on in here."

Every member was in his place for the vote at the end of the 10-day budget debate.

The budget was passed on to the next stage — detailed examination of ministerial estimates — by a vote of 30-26.

The government indicated Finance Minsiter Hugh Curtis will be the first to take the hot-seat. That brought an immediate protest from Barrett.

He complained Curtis has failed to provide the legislature with detailed statements of expenditures for the fiscal year just ending.

"I cannot see how we can properly go into the estimates and have accountability without the full and frank statements that Public Accounts gave us in the past."

In previous years the annual Public Accounts statement, released on budget day, included detailed accounts of all expenditures on government salaries, contracts, sub-contracts, travel expenses, hotel bills and the like.

But this year the accounts book was labelled Volume I, with the detailed expense statements yet to come in Volume II.

Curtis has said only that Volume II can be expected "very soon," Barrett complained.

"I'm not suggesting there is something hidden. I'm just saying we have not had an explanation as to why we haven't had the document."

The opposition members are miffed by the delay. The detailed accounts traditionally provide ammunition for attacking the government.

This year the NDP was counting on the statement of 1979-80 expenditures to fill some of the gaps in the web they are trying to weave around Socred dirty tricks and other affairs embarrassing to the government.

Are Liberals plotting to scuttle Tothill?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Liberal leader Jev Tothill, after one unsuccessful provincial election in his 13 months on the bridge, must be wondering if his British Columbia crew is trying to scuttle him.

Iona Campagnolo, former federal cabinet minister, has disclosed that she was approached by Senator Ray Perrault about running for the provincial party leadership.

The Perrault play for Mrs. Campagnolo, now a CBC television talk-show host, came as a surprise to Tothill.

"I undertook the leadership of the party probably at its most difficult time in 65 years," Tothill said Monday. "Everyone said, 'Why would you want to volunteer as captain of the Titanic?'

"Now, when it looks like, instead of being captain of the ship, I could be admiral of the whole fleet, everyone is asking me when I'll step down."

Tothill, an educational television programs co-ordinator in the public school system at Duncan, was named party leader in February, 1979.

The Liberals failed to elect a member in the provincial general election in May, 1979, and Tothill has attended the legislature only during his holidays. Tothill was named party leader after MLA Gordon Gibson resigned to run federally.

He said a leadership convention is not in the works and conventions are only called when party members demand one, or when the leader steps down. Tothill said he has no intention of resigning and would run again if challenged for the leadership.

Mrs. Campagnolo said she was asked by Perrault last week to put her name forward at the next leadership convention and, while she "never says never," added: "I don't think so."

Shirley McLoughlin, B.C. Liberal president, said the provincial party is "strapped for cash" and is hustling to raise funds to pay Tothill a salary so he can take time off work and attend the current sitting of the legislature.

Mortgage aid program figures vary

Housing Minister Jim Chabot and Finance Minister Hugh Curtis differ substantially on the true cost of the government's vaunted $200 million low-interest mortgage program for new home construction.

Chabot estimated Monday the cost will be "in the $10-million range."

That is the difference between what the government could have earned by investing the money normally and what it will actually get by lending it out for 9¾-per-cent mortgages, he said.

But Curtis said the loss of investment revenue was calculated at $11 million when the program was first devised and that is still a reasonable estimate.

"That's how much the program is costing the people of British Columbia in a direct loss of income, were the $200 million left in an investment account and rolled over," Curtis said.

Critics suggest the discrepancy of some $30 million between the ministers' estimates is a further indication that the housing minister is unfamiliar with the government's main housing program and had no hand in its design.

When Premier Bennett announced the scheme Jan. 8, Chabot was in Australia.

One thing on which Chabot and Curtis do agree: they reject the NDP suggestion that the program be expanded.

Opposition leader Dave Barrett has said $1 billion should be put into low-cost mortgages to produce much-needed housing for British Columbians.

"The $200 million was available; $1 billion is not available," said Chabot.

"If somebody suggests we're sitting on $1 billion in cold, hard cash and not doing anything with it, they're very much mistaken," said Curtis.

Chabot, meanwhile, was forced to clarify his statement in the legislature that B.C. does have a provincial housing corporation in operation.

The minister made that statement last week when being pressed by the opposition about the rental housing crisis.

Chabot told the house Monday he was referring to the B.C. Housing Management Commission. The old B.C. Housing Corporation, established by the NDP, has been liquidated by the Socreds.

However, the housing management commission does not build or acquire properties. It just manages those properties already held by the government.

Chabot told the house the Socred government has no intention of reinstituting the housing corporation, a move demanded by the NDP as a partial answer to the zero-vacancy situation in the Vancouver and Victoria rental market.

Query hushed in Moran case

VANCOUVER (CP) — An employee of the B.C. attorney-general's ministry says he advised the Boundary justice council to "lay low" after it questioned the handling of a 1979 trial involving prominent Kootenay lawyer Mickey Moran.

Greg Cran, a liaison officer for the ministry and former justice co-ordinator for Kootenay region, said in a telephone interview from Cranbrook he gave the advice unilaterally after the council complained to him in the spring of 1979 about the Moran case.

Cran said the Grand Forks-based council tried to use the Moran case to further its philosophical argument that justice is unevenly applied in B.C. courts.

He said the council was trying to prove there were two levels of justice in B.C. — one for people who can influence justice, and one for those who can't.

Cran said he felt the council was trying to change B.C.'s entire legal system by complaining about one particular case and that the council had no proof to back its complaints.

The Moran case was one of three criminal matters cited by the CBC in alleging deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel meddled in cases before the courts to help friends or associates.

Moran, a lawyer in the Kootenays, was charged with impaired driving and failing to take a breath analysis test following an accident near Grand Forks on March 14, 1978.

Before his trial Feb. 9, 1979, the Crown dropped those charges, which carry mandatory penalties. Moran pleaded guilty to dangerous driving, which does not carry a mandatory penalty, and was given an absolute discharge, meaning he received no criminal record.

Attorney-General Allan Williams exonerated Vogel last week of the allegations following an internal investigation into the CBC claim that Vogel personally ordered the Crown's appeal of the Moran verdict be dropped.

WCB reneged, disabled claim

VANCOUVER (CP) — Disabled workers say the Workers' Compensation Board has reneged on a promise to review compensation claim appeals despite the lapse of appeal time limit.

Len Reid, a spokesman for the United Injured and Disabled Workers Association, said some members of the group had never been advised of their right to appeal boards rulings.

"We have lots of people whose claims go back to the 1950s who never knew they had the right of appeal," said Reid.

At a meeting last December, then vice-chairman Jerry Paradis had agreed to accept a monthly list of up to 20 names for review, said Reid.

Since then, the association has submitted two lists of 18 names each for reconsideration, but the board stated that no more lists would be accepted.

Agreement was reached on this issue, one of 19 demands made by the association, after a week-long picket at board offices last November, Reid said.

However, board spokesman Grant McMillan said there was no agreement calling for a monthly list.

McMillan said that any worker can apply to the board anyway.

10 calls an hour in mortgage protest

By PAUL MINVIELLE

A Times story on Ena Curran's protest against high mortgage interest rates produced an avalanche of calls from Victorians Monday.

Proposal 89, the protest movement launched by Mississauga car salesman Viv Woolford and named for his condominium number, is alive and growing in Victoria.

Curran, who heard and heeded Woolford's message several weeks ago, took up the cause and collected almost 200 signatures by talking to people in two shopping centres here.

Only five people refused to participate.

In the lag since her shopping centre forays, Curran picked up 30 more names.

But when the Times hit the street Monday, Curran's phone began to ring off the hook, indicating the movement is just taking wing.

Monday evening, Curran found herself handling almost 10 calls an hour, a total of about 70 in the eight hours after the phone started ringing at at 3:15 p.m.

But Curran had to get up for work this morning, so after finishing an 11:15 p.m. call she unplugged the phone.

Ten callers were individuals and businessmen requesting petitions.

No one has yet offered to help with mailing costs or secretarial chores, but the Curran children are shouldering much of the load.

Linda, 15, takes typing in high school and she has individually typed each petition sheet. Curran's son Pat, 19, asked for petition forms to take to work at Cloverdale Paints at Hillside and Quadra.

And her husband?

"Bob is tolerating it all," Curran said. "I've never known an Irishman to be so patient."

Curran still wants anyone interested in the protest to write her at 4171 Borden in Saanich rather than phoning.

"We want to be able to send tons of mail on to Ottawa," she said.

That tonnage will be coming from almost 100 Canadian communities where Woolford's declaration of frustration touched a nerve.

At last count, Woolford had close to 250,000 names backing his protest, and he wants two million.

Proposal 89 was born when Woolford learned he and 20 other families in his condominium building were in danger of losing their homes.

Mortgages taken out five years ago at 9 per cent came due late last year and Woolford and his neighbors found themselves renewing at close to 15 per cent.

Payments jumped from around $475 to $742.

Woolford had to take a two-week leave absence from his job to handle requests for information about his protest, and then he finally had to quit.

The 31-year-old father of four and his wife are prepared to lose everything they have to prove a point.

Woolford hopes the rally in the Mississauga Valley Community Club this Sunday will result in a national homeowners' association.

The Association to Control Mortgage Rates was already launched in Vancouver last Wednesday, so local groups are pressing ahead on their own.

Curran realizes a meeting is necessary in Victoria but nothing as yet has been organized.

She speculated this morning that such a gathering might be best after the Mississauga rally.

And she hopes such backers as Cyril Shelford, former Socred MLA for Skeena and minister of agriculture, will be able to assist her in organizing it.

Sorry, wrong number to a gracious couple

There are gracious people in the world and Anne Worthington is one of them.

The Worthington's phone number slipped into a Times story Monday about mortgage interest rates, generating 70 calls.

The correct number is 479-0069.

Was Mrs. Worthington upset?

"Oh no. You don't mind when it's for a good cause like this."

She could have left her phone off the hook. Instead she and her husband, Edward, redirected all calls to the right number.

"Can you tell us where we can sign the petition?" Mrs. Worthington asked.

TOWN TALK

The NDP MLA for Shuswap-Revelstoke, Bill King, came to the legislature Monday armed with a long list of awards for the Socreds.

For example:

For Grace McCarthy, a pair of gloves with the right index finger missing.

For Judge Larry Eckardt, a pair of gloves with an extra index finger on the right hand.

Eckardt was the man responsible for the new electoral boundaries which added an unusual extension to McCarthy's riding of Vancouver-Little Mountain. That extension has since become known as "Gracie's finger."

Also on the list:

For George Lenko, a copy of A Man Called Intrepid autographed by his old boss. Lenko, McCarthy's personal aide, resigned during the Dirty Tricks affair, claiming it was all his fault.

Another book award went to Socred backbencher Peter Hyndman, Vancouver South. King said he should get a copy of Great Expectations autographed by Pat Jordan. She made it into the cabinet and Hyndman didn't.

The NDP thought King's list was hilarious. The Socreds permitted themselves an occasional grin.

A new type of dragon kite on the market this spring may have more bite than its owners bargain for — enough to prove fatal, in fact.

B.C. Hydro's safety co-ordinator, Earl Pritchett, is concerned about the kites, made of plastic with aluminized backing and long tails.

Not only should parents and teachers caution children not to fly kites near power lines, Pritchett says, they should also make sure kite lines are made of dry string. Never use wire or metallic string.

Stay away from power lines and telephone wires, he warns. Most phone poles are power poles, too, usually carrying about 6,900 volts per line. It takes only 110 volts to kill.

If your kite is hung up on a power line, call Hydro and let a trained linesman remove it.

Running a hospital isn't an easy job.

Members of Victoria General Hospital's board of management have been faced with some controversial issues recently and consequently have come under fire from the public.

Chairman Alan Patterson noted one letter of criticism, accompanied by a newspaper clipping. It was a model of brevity.

"Whoever you are, smarten up," it said.

For more than a year the birds have been doing what taxpayers would like to, but a clean-up campaign this month is shedding some light on the inner workings of Victoria city hall.

They're removing wind-blown bird droppings decorating the tall windows on the south side of the modern annex.

The mess is the work of starlings which roost in the honeycomb sunshades in front of the windows. Officials are hoping new scarecrow devices will avoid a fresh coat of avian whitewash.

The guck was six inches deep in spots before the clean-up and aldermen and reporters frequenting committee rooms overlooking the south side kept the curtains tightly drawn. Now they can raise the shades but the question remains: will any of them see the light?

It took a bribe of 90 pounds of choice ling cod fillets worth $143 to get Sealand's Stellar sea lions, Benjamin, who weighs in at 1,800 pounds, and Tora, a modest 900 pounds, to settle for a holding pen while their regular pool was brought up to scratch on the weekend.

A work crew directed by Sealand manager Angus Matthews began work after closing time Saturday and drained, cleaned and painted the pool in 12 hours, refilling it with about 75 metric tons of filtered water in time for Sunday's opening.

It was the first time the pool had been drained, cleaned and repainted in 10 years.

A Victoria high school student won a province-wide competition last week, but he couldn't collect the prize.

David Wingrove, a Grade 12 student at St. Michael's University School, had the highest grades of any student in B.C. in a German language competition sponsored by the West German government. The competition was open to students who were not of German background.

The prize was supposed to be a month's all-expenses paid trip to Germany. When the time came to collect it, however, it was found David is officially a British citizen, although he came to Canada when he was three years old. The competition was open only to Canadian students.

Empress Hotel management consoled David a little by inviting him, his family and his German teacher to be their guest at a special evening they're putting on, entitled A Night in Germany.

The Human Rights Code forbids help-wanted ads from specifying the sex of employees to be hired, but employers sometimes find curious ways of explaining what their real needs are.

Take the YM-YWCA, for instance. It needed a don for the women's residence it runs on the second floor of its downtown building. It couldn't specify a female was needed, so it included in the ad the phrase, "Must be eligible to live in women's residence."

And just what criteria might the management have been thinking of?

The university team was unable to reach agreement with a manufacturer to make and market the entire unit at a reasonable price, so component parts are being made by private firms, including Scott Plastics.

Heat Treat goes to the heart of the problem by warming the core of lungs and blood circulating system.

Victoria's first annual home and garden show is a success more than a month before it opens at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

All space for the April 25-27 show has been sold and the 150 booths make it the largest of its kind on Vancouver Island, says a jubilant Alan MacGillivray, president of the Victoria section, Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada.

Premier Bill Bennett and Lands, Parks and Housing Minister Jim Chabot will open the show, Home Expo '80, which will include demonstrations by CBC personalities Jan Eakes, the Mr. Chips of You-Can-Do-It, and gardening adviser Bernard Moore.

There also will be fashion shows, entertainment and a film produced by Sam Bawlf examining future Victoria and Vancouver Island developments.

Lions clubs are in charge of ticket distribution in aid of Lions charities, and a ticket raffle offers a trip for two to the Caribbean.

Transport minister Pepin (right) does a nifty sidestep

Pepin: all charm but no answers

There was lots of Gallic charm but no answers when Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin held his first press conference in Victoria on Monday.

He arrived by helicopter 30 minutes late at the Department of Transport's new multi-million dollar base on Dallas Road and it was obvious he hadn't done his homework.

The press conference — a few quick questions on the helicopter pad — was uninformative.

The minister made it clear he had only three things on his mind during his swing through the west — the jurisdictional problems between B.C. and the federal government over the seabed below Roberts Bank, tentative funding for Prince Rupert port and grain handling facilities and double-tracking of the Canadian National Railway, which he plans to discuss tomorrow in Winnipeg.

Pepin was asked if the weatherships Quadra and Vancouver, due to be taken out of service in 1981, would be given a reprieve. He was not aware they were operated by his ministry until informed by his deputy, Arthur Koreger. Pepin thought they came under Environment Canada.

In any case, the minister did not know if there was any money in the budget to keep the ships operating.

Nor could he say if Victoria International Airport will finally get a radar system. He merely shrugged, smiled and reminded his interogators he had been in office only 15 days.

Reporters drew another blank on search-and-rescue facilities. On this one, Pepin was unaware of a jury's findings last month into the loss of 30 men aboard the ore carrier Lee Wang Zin when she capsized and sank on Christmas Day. The jury urged that a coast guard vessel large enough to withstand storm conditions be based at Prince Rupert.

Earlier in Vancouver, Pepin had said his government was willing to spend $47 million on expansion of Roberts Bank facilities but a compromise was needed on the federal-provincial wrangle over seabed rights.

The federal government has appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada on a 1976 B.C. Court of Appeal decision that the seabed between Vancouver Island and the Mainland comes under provincial jurisdiction.

Police bid would add 10 to force

The Victoria police department is asking for enough money in its 1980 budget of $5.3 million to hire an additional 10 constables.

Its provisional budget — up 10 per cent from last year — was presented to the police board this morning and members went over the spending proposals in detail.

The extra manpower was the last item in the budget, which was 21 typed pages long, and the board hadn't yet got around to discussing the request.

Cost of 10 more policemen is estimated at $95,890. The department has budgeted wages for only the last five months of the year, at the probationary constable's rate, because of the time it would take to hire additions to the force if the board gives approval.

Full-year costs for the new officers would be more than $200,000.

With the hold-the-line mood prevalent on city council, however, it's not certain that the police board, chaired by Mayor Bill Tindall, will automatically approve the plan.

Board members today questioned individual items in the provisional budget and after more than two hours still had three-quarters of the estimates to go through.

For example, board member Alf Hood wondered why white uniform shirts for the officers had gone from $10 each last year to $20 in this year's budget.

Deputy chief constable Jim Smith said few manufacturers carry the special shirts made with epaulettes and that was the best quote obtained by the department.

The board was also told that the Victoria police are still replacing outmoded and obsolete equipment. Two electronic motorcycle sirens costing $350 each are included in the budget, to replace old foot-operated mechanical sirens which operate on the motorcycle's wheel.

Smith said the department had fallen behind in past years in some areas, and is now in the process of catching up.

The department has also increased its purchase of .38 calibre revolvers this year. Two dozen are budgeted where only four were bought last year.

He just got a bad break-in

An unfortunate thing happened to an unidentified man swinging a two-by-four in a bid to break into a coin shop at 831 Fort Monday night.

The police came by.

City police said the man, trying to break through a door panel at the Van Isle Coin and Stamp Shop about 10 p.m., ran off without gaining access.

Earlier Monday, Donald O'Marr, 1683 Chandler, returned home to find a bedroom light on and a utility room window open.

Someone had been in the house and stole $120 in bills from a jewel box.

A young man in jogging jacket, meanwhile, ran off with $49 after holding up 7-Eleven Food Store, 2735 Douglas, about 4 p.m.

Police said the robber used a small hand gun to demand money.

He wore a navy blue jacket with sleeve stripes and was described as slim and 5 feet, 10 inches tall.

Team illness traced to ice machine leak

Carbon monixide fumes from a malfunctioning Zamboni ice-cleaning machine likely caused the illness of Victoria-Esquimalt peewee hockey players and officials on Saturday, New Westminster recreation director Ron Reichelt said Monday.

He said tests conducted by the provincial health department and the Workers' Compensation Board showed high levels of carbon monoxide emissions from the machine. A faulty carburetor was blamed.

Alternative fuel eyed for ferries

A program may soon be launched to find an alternative fuel to the diesel being used by B.C. Ferries.

George Baldwin, chief operations officer, said today the use of alternative fuels is only being discussed "on the surface" at the moment.

"We will have to look into the theoretical aspect first," he said.

Two of the fuels that could be considered are LPG (liquefied petroleum gas) and pulverized coal.

"The major problem with LPG would be carrying it. It would probably have to be carried in pressurized containers," he said.

Traffic manager Bill Bouchard said the ferry fleet consumes 18½ million gallons of diesel fuel a year and costs are soaring.

In 1978, just over $10 million was spent on fuel and oil, and in the year 1979-1980 this is expected to jump 20 per cent to at least $12 million.

Depending on decisions made by the National Energy Board, Bouchard said the cost could climb to $19 million by the 1980-1981 period.

Meanwhile, Seaspan International Ltd., Canada's largest towboat company, has instructed the masters of its 51 tugs to throttle back engine power by 50 revolutions per minute.

Doug Osborne, vice-president of operations, told the fourth annual B.C. Towboat Industry Conference the order is the result of tests made aboard the Seaspan Doris and the Seaspan Venture.

In the February test, the 1,400-horsepower Deutz diesel of the Seaspan Venture was throttled back from 900 revolutions per minute to 800. The speed of the tug and its tandem tow of two chip barges, one partly laden and the other empty, reduced from 8.7 knots to eight knots.

Fuel consumption dropped from 68 U.S. gallons an hour to 32.

Ex-jockey charged in U.S. race scandal

NEW YORK (AP) — Former jockey Con Errico, arrested in connection with what has been labelled "the biggest scandal in U.S. racing history," pleaded innocent Monday to charges he bribed jockeys at Aqueduct and Saratoga in the mid-1970s.

Federal Judge Jack Weinstein set bail at $25,000, which Errico met by posting the deed to his New York City home. Pretrial hearing was set for May 12.

Errico, 58, is accused of taking part in a scheme to bribe jockeys between December, 1973, and November, 1975. Although nine races were alleged to have been fixed, Errico was indicted on a single count of racketeering.

The gals have it—again

A quieter weekend than last, but yet another national champion. The Flora Martin ladies rink won its second straight and fourth Canadian senior women's curling championship in the manner befitting champions — on last rock. And Victoria and Island rinks didn't do too badly in the five (of the seven) major national finals they competed in. Lana Lacheur of Oak Bay had a third in the ladies junior, Stacey Coomber of Nanaimo a third in the men's junior; Glen Harper of Duncan a third in the men's senior and Tim Horrigan of VCC a sixth in the men's national. Methinks it will be a long time before the Island is that well, and that often, represented again. But to Flora and her rink of Elsie Humphrey, Verle McKeown and Edna Messum go the orchids. They're No. 1, twice, and wear them well.

Meanwhile, in the NHL, what's a coach to do? Bobby Kromm, only a year removed as one of the NHL's brightest prospects and a rookie award winner, gets the shaft from Detroit Red Wings, and then Fred Creighton, not yet through his first season in Boston, gets the knife from the Bruins. For Kromm, maybe a reason, because the Wings were struggling. But for Creighton — who knows? Even general manager Harry Sinden wasn't sure when he delivered the blow, saying he almost rescinded the action.

I think Claude Ruel of the Canadiens put it in its proper perspective when in announcing that he didn't plan to return to the Canadiens as coach next season, he said:

"When you're a head coach they expect you to be perfect. Nothing else matters. Look at Creighton. His team was injured all season. They didn't have Brad Park until about a month ago. They've been playing without Don Marcotte since December. Players were suspended. Wayne Cashman has been hurt, and Jean Ratelle. The team is in fourth place, and he's fired. Perfect — that's what a head coach has to be. I can't be perfect."

As for Vancouver Canucks, they must be working on a different wavelength. No sooner than general manager Jake Milford and coach Harry Neale had been confirmed in their appointments and the club apparently was on its way to the playoffs with seven of their last eight games at home, than . . . crash!. They do another el foldo and lose a pair to Detroit and Quebec, two clubs with similar aspirations, but with more heart. Obviously.

Or as Vancouver columnist Jim Taylor said as a guest speaker at the Sportsmen's Dinner last week. "I like Vancouver because it's probably the only town in Canada where you can wake up the next morning knowing that someone has screwed up again."

Oh well, all is not lost. Because on the other hand and right at home, the Cougars finished up with their best season ever and that's a tribute to coach Jack Shupe. No, they didn't win divisional honors, and they finished in a walk after starting off at a gallop. But, in the strange playoff system of the Western League, the Cougars haven't lost that much, only momentum. After all, they compiled the most points and most victories of any Cougar club and also attracted the most fans and it wouldn't take much of a return to form to be a factor in the playoff run where they start all even again. The three clubs — Portland Winter Hawks, Seattle Breakers and the Cougars — have to rate a tossup to determine which two will meet in the final. And if goaltending is to be the key, as so often it is in a short series, could any team be better served than by Kevin Eastman and Grant Fuhr, one-two in the league and take your pick. What other club can make that claim? And besides, as Victoria is the home of champions, this is no time to let the side down?

Vancouver Whitecaps have been and gone and the North American Soccer League champions failed to win many new friends on their brief visit. But then what do you expect from champions? After all, their equipment had arrived late because of an airlines mixup. It was only an exhibition game, so why not be casual. And why bother to heed the public address announcer's call for a pre-game warmup as a team so the players could be properly introduced and received warmly by the 3,000 fans in attendance. They had come primarily to tender tribute and see just how North American soccer is played. As PA announcer Don Wakelyn, who has been involved in soccer most of his life, said: "They were an arrogant bunch and didn't even put on a good show on the field. I think most fans were extremely disappointed."

U.S. poll backs Games boycott

Would rather site switched

NEW YORK (AP) — Although they would rather see the Summer Olympics moved to another country, about two-thirds of the respondents in an Associated Press-NBC News poll say the United States should boycott the Moscow Games.

Sixty-five per cent of the 1,597 adults questioned in telephone interviews around the country said they favor a boycott, while 26 per cent opposed a withdrawal and nine per cent were undecided.

Asked whether the Games should be moved, 74 per cent of the respondents said yes, 18 per cent said no and eight percent were not sure.

President Carter called for the boycott because of Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. The International Olympic Committee has refused to consider moving the Games out of Moscow.

An AP-NBC News poll in late January showed that those who had heard of the Afghanistan crisis backed a boycott by a 73-19 edge.

In the January poll, those who knew of the Soviet actions in Afghanistan backed moving the Games by an 82-13 edge.

A Roper Poll conducted in early March for the U.S. Olympic Committee said Americans favored a boycott under the present circumstances by a 58-28 margin.

In the interviews conducted Thursday and Friday, the respondents first were asked: "Do you think that the 1980 Summer Olympics, now scheduled to be held in Moscow, should be moved to another country because of Soviet actions in Afghanistan or don't you think so?"

The respondents then were asked: "If the 1980 Summer Olympics are not moved out of Moscow, do you think that the United States should withdraw from them or don't you think so?"

Counter-proposal rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House apparently has rejected a counter-proposal by United States athletes to participate in the Olympic Games in Moscow this summer and, at the same time, protest the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan.

A White House aide, who asked that he not be identified, said Monday a similar proposal was considered two months ago, before President Carter called for a complete boycott of the Games, and it was rejected.

The official said, although he had not studied the athletes' counter-proposal, "it's obviously unacceptable."

"The president has made his decision."

Members of the athletes advisory council to the U.S. Olympic Committee met during the weekend to hammer out the proposal under which they would be permitted to compete in Moscow but would protest against the Soviet Union by boycotting all the formal ceremonies.

They would not participate in the opening and closing parades or show up to receive any medals they might win. They also would arrive in Moscow just before they were to compete and would leave immediately after, remaining in the Olympic Village or at the training facilities during the time they were on Soviet soil. They would do no sightseeing or engage in other tourist activities.

The counter proposal came a day after the athletes visited the White House and were told emphatically by President Carter that the United States would not participate in the Summer Games in Moscow.

"I can't say at this moment what other nations will not go to the Summer Olympics in Moscow," Carter told the council members and other athletes and coaches. "Ours will not go."

DRIVING toward basket is Canadian Olympic Team member Tom Bishop, closely attended by Athletes in Action's Tim Warkentin, during men's basketball action at UVic Monday night. National Team won 97-87 in first of four-game series between teams which resumes in Vancouver tonight.

Dolcetti impresses in National victory

Canada's national basketball team, bostered by the addition of UVic's Reni Dolcetti, made a fine start to its Olympic campaign Monday night by defeating the strong Abbotsford-based Athletes in Action squad 97-87 before a crowd of around 1,800 in the McKinnon Gymnasium.

It was a case of third try lucky for Dolcetti who had attempted twice before to make the national team and was invited to try out again after UVic Vikings' recent victory in the national university championships.

Playing for about three-quarters of the game, Dolcetti was strong on the boards, hauling in 13 rebounds and hitting seven of nine from the field while chalking up 16 points against AIA.

UVic coach Ken Shields, who went east to help out with the national training camp, recommended Dolcetti to Canadian team coach Jack Donohue and the six-foot, eight-inch Viking star felt maturity was the reason he had been chosen on his third try.

"As I told coach Donohue, I felt I was mentally ready this time," Dolcetti said after Monday night's game.

Dolcetti, who started up front with Leo Rautins and the seven-foot Jim Zoet, and the rest of his national teammates looked ready as they grabbed an early 12-6 lead.

However, the evangelistic squad rallied and tied the score and once again the national team inched ahead for a 49-46 half-time edge.

The game remained close until midway through the second half when Canada's Olympic team, drawing from their considerable bench strength, began to control preceedings more and pulled ahead.

Rautins, probably the most stylish player on court, scored 27 points to lead Canada's attack while Melvin Williams scored 28 for AIA.

The shooting by both teams was excellent with the Canadian squad making 57 per cent and AIA 51 per cent.

The four-game series between the two teams continues in Vancouver tonight and the last two meetings are in Edmonton and Calgary.

Folk off to good start in world curling meet

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — After seven years of frustration, Canada got off on the right track Monday in its bid to win the men's world curling championship.

Rick Folk, who stresses aggressive play instead of waiting for the opposition to strike first, took an easy 7-2 win over defending champion Kristian Soerum of Norway in the opening round.

In the second round Monday night, the Saskatoon skip struggled against Jurg Tanner of Switzerland but came through with clutch shots when it was necessary to win 7-6 for a share of first place in the round-robin portion of the 10-country tournament.

Tanner, 25, aggravated a hip injury in the seventh end and pulled himself out of the game in the eighth. The Swiss skip said he suffered the injury several months ago, then it became inflamed after he threw a rock in the seventh.

With Switzerland playing short-handed, the Saskatchewan rink came up with two points in the eighth end, thanks to an open draw to the eight-foot circle by Folk, to take a 7-5 lead.

Switzerland got one back in the ninth but ran out of rocks in the 10th.

"We got a little careless in the fifth end, allowing Switzerland to score three points," said Canada's third Ron Mills. "We missed two back-to-back takeouts which put us behind at the time.

"But we got two key points in the sixth end which gave us a 5-4 lead and we played better after that."

Folk, who won the Canadian title earlier this month in Calgary, shares the lead with Italy's Giuseppe Dal Molin and Franz Engler of West Germany, all with 2-0 records.

Canada, which last won the Air Canada Silver Broom trophy in 1972 when Orest Meleschuk finished first, stole single points in each of the first three ends on the way to victory over a struggling Norwegian rink in the first round at the Moncton Coliseum.

Soerum, who eliminated Canadian opponents in the 1979 and 1978 semi-finals and competing in his fifth consecutive world men's tournament, couldn't do anything right against Folk, who curled 88 per cent.

Soerum, who stole three points in the seventh end and two in the eighth to beat American Paul Pustovar of Hibbing, Minn., 8-1 in the evening's second round, praised the Canadians after the setback.

"He (Folk) was just great . . . he gave us very few chances. Only in the third . . . it looked like we had a chance for two points. But he made good shots and stole one."

In other second-round games, West Germany stole a total of five points to beat Scotland 10-6, Italy counted on the first five ends and coasted to an 8-4 win over France and Sweden defeated Denmark 7-3.

The U.S. rallied to defeat Scotland 7-4 in the opening draw, while Italy shaded Denmark 6-4, Switzerland beat Sweden 6-4 and West Germany downed France 5-2.

Punch moves on: 'worn out welcome'

Times News Services

Ernie "Punch" McLean, the controversial coach who built a hockey empire but saw it crumble this season after key players were suspended for violence on the ice, is leaving the Western Hockey League's New Westminster Bruins.

"I've made up my mind," said McLean Monday. "I've worn out my welcome.

"I will not be in New Westminster next year. We built a dynasty here but it's now time to move on."

His comments came a day after the Bruins finished their worst season since moving here from Estevan, Sask., in 1971, setting a league record with 61 losses.

It was the first time in 18 years of coaching that McLean had missed the playoffs.

His record, the most successfull in Canadian junior hockey, included four WHL titles and two Memorial Cups in the 1970s.

But McLean's successful career also was marked by controversy, especially in the last year.

At the close of the 1978-79 season, some Bruins' players were involved in a brutal brawl with an outnumbered group of Portland Winter Hawks.

As a result of the battle seven Bruins pleaded guilty to assault and were given two-month court-imposed suspensions. The Bruins never recovered from the poor start.

McLean was criticized for the rough-and-tumble style of hockey he had promoted. He continued to get unfavorable attention this season when a Portland fan first laid a complaint against him after a game there — but later dropped the charge — and he tossed a garbage can on the ice during a game to demonstrate what he thought of a referee.

McLean defended his style of coaching by saying it was what the National Hockey League wanted. He noted that many Bruins' players had made it to the NHL, including Barry Beck and Ron Greschner of the New York Rangers and Stan Smyl of the Vancouver Canucks.

He would not discuss what he would be doing next year but said a formal announcement may be made in April.

"There comes a time in life when you have to say what more can you do," he said. "I'm at the crossroads now. I'm hitting the road. I've proven what I can do."

In the final regular-season WHL game Monday in Portland, Tim Tookey fired home a slap shot with 13 seconds left while Portland had a two-man advantage to lift the Winter Hawks to a 5-4 victory over Seattle Breakers.

John Multan and Mike Spencer, playing his first WHL game since being called up from Fort Saskatchewan, each scored in the first period as Portland offset a goal by Breaker Tom Marsh.

The Hawks' Florent Robidoux and the Breakers' Dan Held exchanged goals in the second period.

Mike Mesic's goal 35 seconds into the final period pulled Seattle even at 3-3, but Ed Cooper restored the lead to the Hawks at 1:16.

Seattle's Glenn Anderson tied the score once more at 7:08 to set up Tookey's game winner. It was Tookey's 58th of the season.

Goalie Clint Malarchuk made 38 saves for Portland while Jeff Lastiwka stopped 41 shots for Seattle.

Portland, which finished first in the WHL's Western Division, meets Seattle, which ended third, on Wednesday night in the opening game of a round-robin playoff which also includes second-place Victoria Cougars.

The two top teams in the round-robin meet in a best-of-seven series for the Western Division championship and the winner goes on to meet the winner of the Eastern Division playoffs.

McLean leaving New Westminster

Athletes health threatened for glory of winning

MONTREAL (CP) — The use of artificial stimulants, and the improper treatment of possible career-ending injuries to athletes in the cause of victory, pose serious questions for our society today.

Dr. Jacques Duranceau, director of the clinic for sports medicine at the University of Montreal, claims the risk of permanent health damage is the sacrifice many athletes must pay to mount the medal podium or become part of a team victory celebration.

During a recent seminar at Notre Dame Hospital, Duranceau, a member of the Canadian medical team at the 1976 Summer Olympics here, also was critical of "ignorance" displayed by some trainers, the avarice displayed by team owners at the expense of their employees, and politicians who are willing to sacrifice the future of the young to bask in the glory of a gold medal victory for their country.

"Governments are ready to do anything to make political capital with the success of their athletes," Duranceau said. "I will never accept that the physical health of young men and women be threatened just for the glory of climbing onto the podium."

He asked those in attendance if they would accept the possibility of children suffering possible irreparable damage for the sole pleasure of winning an Olympic medal.

The use of anabolic steroids by male athletes and the injection of male hormones to female competitors has become widespread, he noted. Both are banned by the International Olympic Committee, but are believed to be in great demand by athletes in training and attempting to attain international standards.

"I don't know one weightlifter or cyclist at the international level who doesn't use anabolic steroids," Duranceau said. "The case of a young weightlifter comes to mind.

"Today, he is living with a number of handicaps, including atrophy of the testicles."

He recalled the case of a young rower.

"A pinched sciatic nerve was causing sharp pain. The people who ran the team simply asked me if I could do something so she wouldn't suffer.

"There was no question of her withdrawing, since it was her last international competition, and the injury was not 'important' because she would be retiring."

Duranceau said he had no choice, since the woman was ready to do anything to take part. He gave her an injection in her spinal column to get rid of the pain.

The doctor cited the case of a young hockey player who had suffered a torn ligament.

"Usually, it takes 45 days for a ligament to be completly healed," he said. "After five days the pain is gone, and the player, of course, wants to resume playing.

"It's difficult for a doctor to convince a player, the coach and the team's owners that a rest period of 40 extra days is necessary. That's why it's not unusual to see a career end early.

"It's really nobody's fault, because that's the way our medicine has developed — we have to change the attitudes."

Blues collect berth

Times News Services

Larry Patey scored two goals to the lead St. Louis Blues to a 7-5 National Hockey League victory over the home-town Hartford Whalers in one of two games Monday night.

The triumph clinched a playoff spot for the Blues, assuring them of their first post-season appearance since the 1976-77 season.

In the other game, Hickey scored two goals, including one in the opening minute of play, and Darryl Sittler hit the 40-goal plateau for the third time in his career as Toronto Maple Leafs easily defeated Washington Capitals, 6-1.

The St. Louis-Hartford contest was loosely played, with breakaways and giveaways always the order of the day instead of the exception.

The Blues took a 3-2 first-period lead on goals by Mike Zuke, Patey's first goal and a power-play tally by Wayne Babych.

Mark Howe's goal, which bounced off Blues' defender Neil Komadoski, and Ray Allison's first of two goals accounted for Hartford's first-period scoring.

Allison then gave the Whalers a 3-3 tie at the 2:38 mark of the second period.

But unanswered goals by Bernie Federko, Patey's second goal and a power-play score by Blake Dunlop gave St. Louis the lead for good in the second period.

Jordy Douglas netted a pair of third-period goals to close out the Whalers' scoring.

Tony Currie added the Blues' final score in the third period, completing a two-on-one break with Jack Brownschidle.

In Toronto, Wayne Stephenson was far and away the top player for the Capitals — despite giving up six goals — as he was blitzed with 45 shots, including 18 in the second period.

John Anderson, with his 23rd of the year, Terry Martin, with his fourth, and Rocky Saganiuk, with his 21st, also scored for the Leafs. The two goals raised Hickey's season total to 28.

Rolf Edberg collected his 20th of the year for the Capitals, who now are winless in their last seven road games.

Pakistan tops Australia for first time in test

LAHORE, Pakistan (Reuter) — Pakistan beat Australia for the first time in a three-test cricket series Sunday, holding onto its 1-0 lead when the final match ended in a draw.

The last day of the series was a personal triumph for Australian all-rounder Allan Border, who completed his second century of the match. But the series belonged to Pakistan, led for the first time by Javed Miandad, as it won the first test in Karachi by seven wickets and then denied Australia a scent of victory in the next two.

Scores — Australia 407 for seven declared and 390 for eight, Pakistan 420 for nine declared.

Mearns eyes place on Equestrian team

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Equestrian Federation is almost unique among Olympic sport organizations preparing for the Moscow Games — it has competitors who have won Olympic medals and could do so again this summer.

Jim Elder of Aurora, Ont., won the jumping gold in Mexico in 1968 and Michel Vaillancourt of Hudson, Que., won the silver at the 1976 Montreal Games.

Ian Miller of Perth, Ont., won the individual bronze and was on the silver medal jumping team along with Terry Liebel of Willowdale, Ont., Mark Laskin of Edmonton and Vaillancourt at last year's Pan-American Games.

Then there's Juliette Bishop of Calgary, Liz Ashton of Orangeville, Ont., Mark Ishoy of Woodbridge, Ont., and Cathy Wedge of Saskatoon who won the 1978 world championship in the combined three-day event.

"We have a definite chance to win a medal in Moscow," says Gillian Wilson, the federation's technical director.

"But unlike other sports where the athlete has to be right at the right moment, in our events both the horse and the rider have to be right," Wilson said.

The makeup of the Canadian team likely won't be known until June because the federation wants as much as time as possible to assess riders and horses during competitions in the spring and early summer, Wilson said.

"We like to leave it as late as possible to get the best possible team," he said.

The federation does not hold training camps or selection competitions like most of the other sports, preferring to see potential team members in competition before choosing them.

While the federation has lost its top horse Sympatico — it died after the Pan-Ams — Wilson said there are plenty of good horses in training.

There are three equestrian events at the Olympics — dressage, in which horses have to perform set patterns, jumping and the three-day combined event, a blend of dressage, jumping and cross-country.

Wilson said the top candidates for the three berths on the dressage team are Cindy Neale of King, Ont., Christiolt Boylen of Cedar Valley, Ont., Bonnie Bonnello of Edmonton and Ed Rothkrantz of Sharon, Ont.

Among those trying for the four places in the three-day event are Bishop, Ashton, Ishoy and his brother Neil, Wedge, Jamie Smart of Thornhill, Ont., Bill Ulmer of Kelowna, B.C., Nick Holmes-Smith of Oliver, B.C., and Lorraine Laframboise of Luskville, Que.

Best prospects for the four places on the jumping team are Liebel, Elder, Miller, Laskin, Vaillancourt, John Simpson of Cochrane, Alta., and Madeline (Bo) Mearns of Victoria.

After they are selected, the dressage team will go to Germany for pre-Olympic training and the jumpers will go to France, possibly accompanied by the three-day team.

Transporting the horses to the Games is one of the biggest headaches the federation faces.

Seven city bowlers in coast pin finals

Seven men and seven women have been named to Victoria teams to compete in the Pacific Coast fivepin bowling championships in Port Alberni May 17 to 19.

The bowlers made the teams after weekend trials at Town and Country and Mayfair Lanes.

Sandy MacNeil rolled single high games of 415 and 399 and the others in the women's team, which is coached by Ernie Moon, are June Peddlesden, Pat Smith, Therese Stone, Sharon Orr, Moe Wood and Kay Clarke.

Wayne Hendry topped the men bowlers in the trials with a high game of 365 and the rest of the team is Fred Hickey, Dave Meredith, Don Brown, King Lee, Leo Kossey and Mike Parry. Lynn Hickey is the men's coach and Jim Parry will coach the mixed team.

Horseshoes anyone?

The Greater Victoria Horseshoe Pitching Association is seeking members and ayone interested is asked to contact Tom Hawkins, 477-6743, or John Johnson, 388-5245.

Draft for players will be held at Glanford Park, Sunday, April 13, at 1 p.m.

Louisville takes title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Darrell Griffith raced to the basket, soared high in the air as the buzzer sounded and pounded the backboard repeatedly with both fists, finishing off his finest moment with typical flare.

"This makes it all worthwhile," said Griffith, the all-American guard whose 23 points and poise down the stretch helped Louisville beat UCLA 59-54 Monday night for the school's first national U.S. college basketball championship.

"This is the one I wanted," he added. "Four years ago, when I came to Louisville, I said that before I leave we would have a championship. Now I feel I've upheld that commitment."

It was a commitment he shared with Denny Crum, who took over as coach of the Cardinals nine years ago. Although his teams won more than 24 games per season and were always highly ranked, they never won the U.S. title.

Justly or not, Crum had earned a reputation as being unable to win thebig one — a reputation that was finally laid to rest Monday night.

What they did was score the last nine points of the game, force mistakes with pressure defence and hold UCLA scoreless for the final 4:32 to overcome a 54-50 deficit.

Cardinals finished with a 33-3 record, the second-winningest NCAA champion ever behind 1948 Kentucky, which was 36-3.

Purdue beat Iowa 75-58 in the consolation game for third place.

Club owner, coach face tax charges

MIAMI (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has told Miami Dolphins owner Joe Robbie that he owes more than $500,000 in back taxes and head coach Don Shula owes more than $38,000 in back taxes.

Both men are fighting the IRS ruling through tax courts in Miami.

The dispute is a civil matter only.

Charles Hogue, accountant for Robbie, said the key issue is whether Robbie is allowed a tax write-off on the depreciation of his National Football League players. Robbie claims he can depreciate players he buys from other clubs "just like a piece of furniture," Hogue said.

'Sexual storm troopers': a call to arms

BURNABY (CP) — Women who approach the level of male athletic performance must become "sexual storm troopers" to advance the cause of the female athlete, says Iona Campagnolo, former federal minister of fitness and amateur sport.

She told a conference on the female athlete at Simon Fraser University that women must continually fight the myths that say sport is physically harmful to women and results in lost femininity.

"God gave us our protective organisms," she said. "We didn't have to get them from Cooper or Adidas."

Campagnolo said women are entering a golden age of sport which could lead to "defencepersons" some day in the National Hockey League.

However, female athletes must be prepared to encounter resistance as they narrow the gap between themselves and men in athletic performance.

Rather than welcoming the change, Campagnolo said development of women's sport will revive male fears of the aggressive woman.

"Men have become brothers in sport . . . women are punished for their excellence and isolated from their own sex."

Abigail Hoffman, former international middle-distance runner who is currently a sport consultant with the Ontario government, said most of the progressive changes in women's sport "have happened through gratuitous circumstances and not through concerted effort."

Despite the performance advances of female athletes, Hoffman said there are many legal and administrative barriers to overcome before women achieve equality of opportunity and resources.

"No government in Canada has alleviated the inequality in sports which exist. Educators continue to organize sports for girls and boys on a sex, rather than an ability basis."

Tracy Austin holds trophy after win over Martina Navratilova

Tracy just one of kids, but $100,000 richer

NEW YORK (AP) — Tracy Austin returns to high school in Rolling Hills, Calif., today and becomes just another one of the kids.

The only difference is she's $100,000 richer after winning the $300,000 women's indoor tennis championship at Madison Square Garden on Sunday.

"I don't really think about the money," Austin said after her 6-2, 2-6, 6-2 victory over Martina Navratilova. The victory brought her 1980 earnings to $243,000.

"I think I'm a kid when I'm in high school back home and when I'm with my friends."

Asked what she is when she's on the tennis court, she hesitated and Navratilova answered for her: "A tennis player."

And what does a 17-year-old do with the money?

"I really don't do much," she said. "I live with my parents. I won a car in my first pro tournament. I might go shopping a little bit more than I used to. But I don't buy anything wild."

Austin methodically defeated Navratilova with accurate passing shots and devastating service returns.

Navratilova, two-time defending Wimbledon champion, lost for only the second time in 38 matches this year. And, Sunday's victory's by Austin reversed the decision in last year's winter tour finale, when Navratilova beat Austin 6-3, 3-6, 6-2.

A Madison Square Garden crowd of 13,878 — an all-time one-day attendance record for women's tennis — watched the Avon tour championsip.

Navratilova won $52,000 for her runner-up finish. Evonne Goolagong-Cawley took third place by default when Billie Jean King had to withdraw because of a knee injury.

"I'm pretty happy with what happened this season," Austin said. "I'm even happier now."

Happy and $100,000 richer.

Cup sponsor

LONDON (AFP) — A $2.23 million sponsorship from a leading Japanese firm will provide backing for the next three years of the Federation Cup, the women's world team tennis championship. This year's competition will be held in West Berlin, May 19-25.

Don't try to emulate male pros: Hoffman

BURNABY (CP) — Women athletes could be making a mistake trying to emulate men's professional sports, says Abigail Hoffman, a prominent Canadian sports advisor.

"Whether or not the model of men's professional sport is a good model for women to pursue is something women will have to consider," Hoffman told a weekend conference on the female athlete. "And I don't think it is."

Hoffman, now with the Ontario ministry of culture and recreation, said men's professional sports devote too much money, time and energy to a system that did not promote "an appropriate ethic of athletics."

"It's full of hype and exaggerated competitiveness and not related to excellence. For example, professional hockey — there has been an increase in teams and franchises without a concomitant increase in the quality of play in professional hockey.

"Professional sports is about people who own teams who own players for the express purpose of making money.

"Professional sports is about big business. There has been more press in the Toronto newspapers on a possible baseball players' strike this year than on women's sports."

Another major problem facing women athletes, the former track star said, is a lack of money and to get that funding, women will have to be more vocal in their views.

Dr. Sue Riggs, of the University of Regina's physical education department, told the 360 women athletes attending the Simon Fraser University conference that women can add muscle without losing femininity.

"It's becoming more and more obvious that great improvements in strength are possible in the female," she said. "And those improvements can be achieved without any masculinizing effect which is a fear that has long inhibited women.

Higgs said it is possible for women to become much stronger without adding bulging muscles.

"What I'm saying is that the Mr. America image is not possible for the female. Practically and aesthetically there is only a very slight increase of about one centimetre in the flexed biceps girth in a woman (after strengthening exercises)."

Higgs said a woman can achieve a significant improvement in strength in a short time.

"There is no need to train more than three times a week for half an hour each time and that would bring about a 20-percent increase in strength.

"Strength has been largely ignored in the training of females. If a woman just alters her lifestyle and picks up objects herself instead of calling her husband to help there would be a natural increase in strength."

Time running out for cycling hopefuls

Canada's top cyclists, seen above competing in an 87-kilometre training race, have only a few days left at the national Olympic team camp at Shawnigan Lake before they head overseas for a series of pre-Moscow Games races.

A sprinter whose speciality race is the one-kilometre time trial on the track, Singleton finished fourth in the road training race which was won by Steve Bower of Ontario.

Shawnigan Lake was chosen for the first time this spring instead of Florida as the site of the annual training camp. When the camp wraps up Saturday, the cyclists will split into two groups with one going to ride in Mexico and the other leaving for a series of big races in Europe in further preparation for the Olympic Games.

Gretzky draws closer

MONTREAL (CP) — First-year centre Wayne Gretzky of Edmonton Oilers won't be the National Hockey League rookie of the year, but he could be the league's scoring champion.

Statistics released Monday show that Gretzky has pulled within seven points of leader Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles Kings in the scoring parade.

Centre Dionne has 52 goals and 76 assists for 128 points, while Gretzky has 121 points from 45 goals and 76 assists. Both the Kings and Oilers have six games left in the regular season.

The 19-year-old Gretzky, who played last year with Indianapolis Racers and Edmonton in the defunct World Hockey Association, was ruled ineligible for the rookie award, as were other former WHA players who entered the NHL this season.

Soccer players charged in bribe

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Eleven soccer stars and the president of Italy's defending champion Milan club were arrested Sunday on charges of swindle, police announced.

The arrests came three weeks after the Italian soccer world was shaken by charges from persons described as disgruntled bettors that some of Italy's top players took bribes to influence games.

Customs police, waiting in the dressing rooms of stadiums in Milan, Pescara, Rome, Palermo and Genoa, took the players into custody at the end of Major League and Second Division games and served them warrants issued by various prosecutors.

Lazio centre-forward Bruno Giordano, defenders Giuseppe Wilson and Lionello Manfredonia and goalie Massimo Calciatori were taken to Pescara police headquarters at the end of the Pescara-Lazio match.

Milan veteran goalie Ricky Albertosi and midfielder Giorgio Morini were arrested after the Milan-Torino match as was their club president, industrialist Felice Colombo.

Mauro Della Martira and Luciano Zecchini, defenders with the Perugia club, were able to end their match against Roma, in Rome, before being taken away by policemen.

Stefano Pellegrini, a forward with Avellino, was arrested in Avellino. Sergio Girardi, goalie of second-division Genoa, and Guido Magherini, a forward of second division Palermo, also were arrested.

If proven guilty, the players would be banned from the sport for life. There also would be repercussions on the weekly state-run soccer pool, a major source of revenue for the Italian Olympic Committee. Italians bet $6.7 million on a slate of 13 games played Sunday.

The complaints that led to Sunday's arrests, which cast shadows on the prestige of Italian soccer and on the championship games under way, had come from Roman fruit dealer Massimo Cruciani and restaurant owner Alvaro Trinca.

The two, purportedly acting on behalf of a group of bettors, said to have lost more than $1.85 million this year to illegal bookmakers, claimed that the players took bribes but did not always keep their wordand try to lose the games.

The two have been arrested after failing to show up for questioning by prosecutors.

Reports said the betting syndicates cashed in only a few times on the schemes both for reported reneging by the players and because the players allegedly bribed were unable to influence the results.

B.C. swimmers dominate

SASKATOON, Sask. (CP) — Jill Christenson of Vancouver's Canadian Dolphin Swim Club added her third win of the meet and Gary Grant of the Hyack Club of New Westminster recorded his fifth as the Western Canada division-two short-course swim championship concluded Sunday.

Christenson, 14, won the 800-metre freestyle in 9:23.59 to add to earlier victories in the 200 and 400 free events.

Grant, 16, added the 100-metre freestyle title to his list with a time of 0:53.14. He earlier won the 50, 200 and 400-metre freestyle and the 200 individual medley.

Hyack compiled 644 points for the men's division championship, while Edmonton Keyano won the women's title with 822 points.

U.S.S.R. Islamic people gaining on Russians

By DAN FISHER
Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — The Islamic people of the Soviet Union are increasing at a faster rate than the Russian people are, according to figures just published here.

Some experts had thought that the new figures, based on a census completed last year, would show the Russians to be a minority, but they still constitute a majority, although a slight one at 52.4 per cent of the total population.

Ten years ago the Russians made up 53.4 per cent, and the trend indicates that they will continue to maintain a slight majority until about the turn of the century.

Total Soviet population was put at 262 million, an increase of about 20 million since 1970.

The combined population of 22 nationality groups that are culturally Islamic grew by 8.5 million during the decade, while the number of ethnic Russians grew by only 8.4 million.

The statistics are from the sixth nationwide census, which was conducted in January, 1979. The nationality breakdown was published in a 31-page brochure entitled "Population of the U.S.S.R."

The figures indicate that Soviet Muslims now number more than 43.1 million and account for 16.4 per cent of the total population, up from 34.6 million and 14.3 per cent in 1970. And they underline a significant population shift, to the southern and Central Asian republics.

The figures do not suggest that all those millions are religious Muslims about to erupt in some new fundamentalist Islamic revolution. As the term Islamic is used here, it is primarily a convenient way to designate a group of nationalities with a similar cultural heritage just as the term Slavic designates Russians, Ukrainians and Byelorussians.

Atheists in Soviet Central Asia often refer to themselves as Muslims if they are ethnically Uzbek, Tadjik, Turkmen or one of the other nationalities that embraced Islam centuries ago.

While the danger of any Islamic religious revival that could threaten the Soviet structure appears to be minimal, the continued rapid growth of population among these nationalities, at a time when the Slavic and other European nationalities are growing much more slowly, does raise serious economic and political questions.

For example, the Communist Party leadership remains predominantly Russian, but as the percentage of the Muslim nationalities continues to increase, some analysts believe, it will lead to pressure for more representation at the top.

At present Dinmukhamed A. Kunayev, a Kazakh, is the only member of the 14-man Politburo who is ethnically related to the Muslim element.

Also, despite large Soviet investment, the Muslim sections are still among the poorest parts of the country. And the very nationalities that are growing the fastest appear to be the most reluctant to move to the European areas where most of the industry is situated.

For example, 85 per cent of all Uzbeks — the third largest national group in the Soviet Union, according to the new census — live in Uzbekistan. That represents an increase from 84 per cent over the 1970 census, and the increase came during a nine-year period when the total Uzbek population rose by nearly 3.3 million, or more than 35 per cent.

If the Soviet leadership cannot persuade more Central Asians to move to European Russia, where the jobs are, it will mean the need to shift a greater percentage of the country's industrial investment and other resources to the Muslim areas. Such a shift could cause grumbling in the European part of the country, where there is already visible prejudice against Asians.

The combined population growth for the 22 Muslim nationalities studied was 25 per cent during the 1970-1979 period, compared to a 6.5 per cent growth in the number of ethnic Russians and a 5.8 percent increase among the three major Slavic nationalities combined.

The latest census shows that the number of ethnic Russians increased between 1970 and 1979 in 13 of the 15 constituent Soviet republics by anywhere from 6.1 to 22.2 percent. The largest increases came in Moldavia and Byelorussia.

The number of Russians living in all five Soviet Central Asian republics — Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, Kirghizia, Tadjikistan and Turkmenia — also increased, by 6.5 per cent, to 14.8 per cent. Yet in all five of those republics Russians now comprise a smaller percentage of the total population than they did a decade ago, because the local Muslim population grew at a much faster rate.

Practical problems protect Gulf oilfields

By THOMAS FRIEDMAN

AL-AHMADI, Kuwait (UPI) — The threat of a Soviet invasion of Gulf oilfields may seem real to American military strategists, but to oil men in the region it is a joke.

"No way," said Sulaiman Mutawa, a director of the Kuwait Oil Company (KOC). "It simply can't be done. I don't know who dreams up such problems."

Oil industry experts from Kuwait to Abu Dhabi are convinced the idea of a Soviet blitzkreig to seize, pump and use the crude oil of a Gulf producer is straight out of James Bond.

No one disputes that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan brings the Russians uncomfortably close to the source of 60 percent of the West's oil imports. Few deny that the Russians will have to import oil themselves by the end of the decade if not sooner.

But no one expects them to come over the dunes to get it.

"Trying to take over the oilfields by force," said an American oil executive in Abu Dhabi, "is like trying to grab a very fragile vase with red hot tongs. The second you touch it, it shatters.

"Same with the oilfields. The second you try and grab them, they will be destroyed. All you will be left with is blowing sand."

"Let me tell you — taking over an oilfield is not just pushing a few buttons," said Mutawa in his office at the headquarters of the KOC in al-Ahmadi.

Here are some of the problems the oilmen say an invading Soviet Union would face in trying to seize even part of the Gulf's oil wealth:

Nothing could be more vulnerable to sabotage than the fragile, widely spread, highly pressurized installations that make up an oil field. In a Russian grab there would be no shortage of homegrown saboteurs in this fiercely anti-communist region.

Oil production could be choked off at any of a dozens of points in the network. First at individual wells — Kuwait has 700, Saudi Arabia 800. Then at pipelines from each producing well to gathering centers. Then in the centers which separate gas and crude oil, which surface together. Then at larger pipelines which carry crude to row on row of "tank farm" tanks near coastal shipping terminals.

"As soon as these people get wind of an invasion, and presumably they would have some warning time, the first thing they will do is blow up the gathering centers, all of which have police guards," said the American oilman, for 10 years an advisor in the United Arab Emirates.

"It would not take a genius to blow one up. They are rather combustible with all that pressurized gas and crude oil."

If gas separators in the gathering stations are "disturbed," wells are immediately closed and all production halted. Destroying the gathering station power plants would cut off electricity to pump oil, push it through pipelines or perform other processes like gas or water injection.

Rebuilding a blasted gathering station would be a major enterprise, requiring some of the most sophisticated oil industry technology.

Under the best conditions, industry sources estimate, this would take the Russians two years. All new equipment — pumps, turbines, separators — would have to be produced and flown from the Soviet Union, which cannot satisfy its own oil industry needs. Last year it had to go to the West for relatively simple items like drill bits and pipe which were in short supply.

Even if it could be rebuilt, the cost would be enormous. A U.S. congressional study estimated repairing the gathering center at Abqaiq, Saudi Arabia, destroyed by accident in May 1977, to cost $100 million.

Kuwait alone has 25 such gathering centers.

Even if the Soviets could make the fields operational again, how could they be kept in operation?

"There are miles and miles of pipeline running across the open desert," said the American oilman. "It is the easiest thing in the world to rip a hole through some pipe with an explosive charge.

"Do you patrol the pipes? Rubbish. Saboteurs would be constantly nipping in as soon as your patrol went by. The only way to safeguard the pipes would be to have men stationed along them every few hundred yards."

Saudi Arabia alone has more than 3,000 miles of pipe connecting its wells. A fence to protect its five principal fields would enclose 10,000 square miles — twice the size of Connecticut.

Defending tank farms, said one expert, would be like defending a parking lot full of blimps.

"Anyone with a mortar or a shoulder-held missile could lob a shell into the tank farm," said the American expert. "You don't have to be a very accurate shot. They're big tanks and there are plenty of them."

Until new tanks were built — which would require massive amounts of steel — oil production again would cease.

Probably the biggest headache would be finding skilled personnel to keep the fields running.

"We have 5,000 highly trained people here working on a 24-hour-a-day rotation," said Mutawa about Kuwait. "They would not be too cooperative to a foreign occupier.

"So who is going to operate the fields? It is not just a matter of teaching a soldier to turn some valves."

If the Russians could solve all these problems, how would they get the oil back home to use it? This problem really draws smiles from oilmen.

Unless the Soviets built a pipeline across Iraq or Iran — which would take years, assuming they could manufacture enough pipe — they would have to ship out the oil in tankers.

Not only is the Soviet tanker fleet wholly inadequate for such a task, it would be exposed to all manner of harrassments, blockades, and mining operations.

For these reasons Gulf oil industry executives and political leaders scoff at President Carter's suggestion that the Soviet move into Afghanistan was designed to position them to seize Gulf oilfields.

"It's just unthinkable," said the American oilman.

"We are not afraid of any action by Russia," Kuwait's Foreign Minister Shaikh Sabah al-Ahmad al-Sabah told UPI.

"This is something we are 100 percent sure about. Not only Kuwait, but all the Gulf. You have to know that: 100 percent."

UN appeals for food for famine-hit Uganda

KAMPALA (UPI) — The United Nations appealed Monday for money to finance an urgent food airlift to drought-stricken northern Uganda where some half a million people are suffering one of the worst famines in recent African history.

Melissa Wells of the U.N. development program made the appeal in a letter to governments, churches and relief groups. She said an estimated 136,000 residents of the worst-hit Karamoja region bordering Kenya are "at a critically desperate level of starvation" and an immediate airlift is the only way of saving them.

Relief officials describe the situation as one of the most serious famines in recent African history.

"It's the worst thing I have ever seen," one Western aid official said. "Children as thin as sticks lie there on the ground and doctors tell you they will be dead by this time tomorrow."

The United Nations estimated half a million people were suffering from severe food shortages in the north of the country, which is still recovering from last year's economy-shattering invasion by Tanzanian forces and Ugandan exiles, which led to the overthrow of President Idi Amin.

Officials said the current drought has been worsened by the breakdown of law and order and the collapse of the nation's transportation system since Amin's ouster.

Ms. Wells said that when she visited the region three weeks ago there was no food available at any price, and when U.N. officials began distributing a small amount of their own food, there was "an ugly scene."

An agreement between the U.N. World Food Program and Kenya collapsed last year because Kenya reneged on its committment to deliver 8,100 tons of corn to Uganda in return for an equal amount of Canadian wheat.

As a stopgap measure, the United Nations has negotiated for 1,000 tons of cowpeas from Tanzania and 4,000 tons of world food program corn now in Ethiopia.

But Ethiopia wants $22,000 for a shuttle flight from Addis Ababa, and more than 100 flights are necessary to move the corn to Uganda.

Drill rig blast: 2 dead, 29 hurt

GALVESTON, Tex. (AP) — The drilling rig began to "kick" and mud started to spray from the well, but evacuation procedures had just begun when an explosion devastated the 41-man crew, survivors say.

Two men were killed and 29 injured in the blast Monday on the rig drilling a gas well 150 kilometres off the upper Texas coast. Six men escaped without any injuries and four others were missing.

The Galveston County coroner's office identified the dead as Richard McDonald, 30, and Douglas James Sparks, 23, and ordered autopsies to determine the exact cause of death.

The four missing men were last seen near the well head where the blast originated, workers said. But the U.S. Coast Guard and private craft continued a search late Monday.

"The concussion just blew me over the handrail and then the flames came right up over me as I started to fall," said Stan Riley, 22. "I was lucky I got blown off. The other guys on the production platform got burned."

U.K. steel men balk

LONDON (Reuter) — Trade union leaders of more than 100,000 striking British steel workers Monday night rejected a management call to return to work this week.

The state-owned British Steel Corp. and unions earlier agreed to an independent committee of inquiry to examine the workers' claim for a 20-per-cent pay increase.

Union sources said they hope the inquiry would start next week. But the three-month strike is unlikely to be called off before Easter holidays starting April 4, the sources added.

Public Announcement

APPLICATIONS FOR NEW FM STATIONS

In a Public Notice dated 18 April 1979, the Commission indicated that it wished to assess the implications of the long range radio plan of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on the overall radio requirements of the Canadian broadcasting system and it would therefore not issue any further calls for private FM applications before 31 December 1979.

In recent months the Department of Communications (D.O.C.) has been considering revisions to the allotment plan for FM broadcasting in Canada on a regional basis. Provisional plans have already been published in the Canada Gazette for a number of geographical areas, e.g. the Maritimes, Newfoundland, Southern Ontario and British Columbia. Plans for the remaining regions of the country are expected to be released in the near future. These revised provisional plans are based on recent forecasts for private and educational needs in addition to the future requirements of the CBC. The D.O.C. study has revealed that in most areas of the country, all the requirements forecast for FM channels can be met based on the provisional plans that have been developed.

In light of the above, the Commission announces that it is now prepared to receive applications for the provision of FM radio services to all regions of Canada, except the areas of Vancouver-Victoria, Montreal and surrounding area, and Southern Ontario, where shortages have been identified relative to the forecasts of future channel requirements.

For further delineation of the areas noted above, where shortages have been identified, please write to the Secretary General, CRTC, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0N2, or phone 819-997-1027 or 997-1108. Persons wishing to submit applications should file them with the Commission on or before 31 July 1980. Dates and locations of the relevant public hearings will be announced by the Commission in the fall of 1980.

The Commission expects that the CBC will be formally filing its long-range radio plans shortly. Subsequently the Commission intends to invite public comments on all aspects of the Corporation's plan so that a determination can be made on the best utilization of the available FM channels in those areas where shortages have been identified.

Washington mount preparing to erupt?

COUGAR, Wash. (AP) — Mount St. Helens, silent for the last 123 years after erupting in four of the last five centuries, may be about to blow again, scientists say after a series of small earthquakes.

Subterranean quiverings during the last five days have made the mountain seem somewhat like a bear growling during hibernation. There's no harm yet, but it's attracting a lot of attention.

Cross-country skiers have been told to avoid the mountain because of avalanche hazards caused by aftershocks. A quake Monday caused high-elevation snowslides on the north and northwest slopes.

Mount St. Helens, about 80 kilometres north-northeast of Portland, Ore., rises 2,949 metres to a symmetrical snow-capped peak often compared in beauty to Fujiyama in Japan. Layers of pumice from eruptions 3,500 and 450 years ago have been found 80 km to the east.

The last eruption occurred in 1857.

"We know the mountain will erupt again, but we don't know when," said Steve Malone, a University of Washington seismologist in Seattle.

Judy Terreberry, a spokesman for the university's geophysics program, noted a swarm of small tremors at the mountain since Thursday. Volcanoes around the world "typically display the same type of activity right before they blow," she said.

Meanwhile, the earthquake that shook two fishing villages in the Aleutian Islands for nearly 3 minutes Sunday caused no damage or injuries, officials have reported.

Irish pact founders in feuds

LONDON (AP) — The British government's second attempt to coax Northern Ireland's feuding Protestant and Roman Catholic politicians to work together was abandoned when the factions could not agree on sharing power in the province.

The government announced that Humphrey Atkins, Britain's secretary of state for Northern Ireland, on Monday adjourned indefinitely the Belfast constitutional conference on the future of the strife-torn province.

The biggest Protestant party, the Official Unionists, boycotted the talks. The conference collapsed when Rev. Ian Paisley, fiery leader of the Protestant Democratic Unionist party and John Hume, head of the predominantly Catholic Social Democratic and Labor party, could not agree on sharing power.

Official sources said Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, under mounting diplomatic pressure from the Irish republic to find a political solution in Northern Ireland, is expected to formulate proposals for limited self-rule for the province.

The government is expected to publish its proposals this summer. There is speculation it will include a proposal for elections for a provincial assembly with limited powers by March, 1981.

Paisley is demanding the restoration of majority government to the province, in which the Protestants outnumber the Catholics 2-to-1. Along with most Protestant political leaders, he rejects any sharing of power with the Catholic minority, contending that would be the first step toward the end of British rule and the union of Northern Ireland with the predominantly Catholic Irish republic.

The British have long contended that only power-sharing can produce a political agreement that will end the Catholic-Protestant warfare in which at least 2,019 persons have died in 11 years. The government fears that to restore majority government would provoke the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The British government patched together a Protestant-Catholic coalition in 1974 but a Protestant general strike torpedoed it after five months in office.

Hostage solution likely

BOGOTA (AP) — Smiles and handshakes ended the sixth round of talks between the Colombian government and the guerrillas holding 32 hostages in the embassy of the Dominican Republic.

Government sources said the new phase of talks pointed the way toward a peaceful solution to the crisis, which began when the guerrillas stormed the embassy at a diplomatic reception Feb. 27.

There was no confirmation that the guerrillas have backed off from their demand that 28 political prisoners be freed from Colombian jails. But a government source, who asked not to be identified, said: "Everything indicates that we are headed slowly, as is natural in such a difficult situation, toward a solution which falls within the laws and the constitution."

Bolivians fill streets for funeral

LA PAZ (AP) — Thousands of Bolivians jammed the cobblestone streets of La Paz on Monday in a funeral procession for a slain Roman Catholic priest who edited the left-leaning weekly newspaper Aqui.

The bullet-riddled body of Rev. Luis Espinal was found in a La Paz slum Saturday and Interior Minister Jorge Selum resigned immediately, blaming the murder on "para-military terrorists." He said his ministry was aware of a plot by right-wing extremists to kill a number of leftists but was powerless to do anything.

A recent wave of violence has increased fears of a coup by conservative military commanders to bar presidential elections scheduled for June 29.

Mama Skunk done thunk rock stunk!

DALLAS, Ore. (UPI) — A week ago, no one could have convinced Slim Payne, 75, that rock music had any redeeming value. To him, "The stuff just sounds like a conglomeration of noise."

Now he recommends it as a first-class skunk eradicator.

One evening Payne and his wife returned home to find a family of skunks had made a home under their kitchen floor.

After trying several other remedies to no avail, Payne placed a radio under the house, dialed a local rock station and turned it up full blast.

In less than three days — during which Mrs. Payne had to wear ear plugs — the skunks moved on.

Export gas, no price rise

OTTAWA (UPC) — Exports to the United States of Canadian natural gas will remain at current price levels, Energy Minister Marc Lalonde said after reaching agreement on a pricing formula with U.S Energy Secretary Charles Duncan.

The agreement in principle will keep export prices at the current $4.97 per thousand cubic feet of gas, Lalonde told reporters after a day-long meeting Monday with his American counterpart.

He also said that details of the arrangement were in both countries' interest and details would be made public later this week.

The United States has been urging the Canadian government not to raise its gas export price beyond the current price rate.

"It has been understood that the price will not be changed, but other issues and details of other aspects will be released later this week," Lalonde said.

There was no word on whether the two ministers agreed on a further increase in natural gas exports, a move under consideration by the National Energy Board. The level of exports is closely linked with plans to build a Canadian section of the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline ahead of the full project.

Duncan, in a brief statement, said the pipeline project was a priority of the U.S. government and that all steps were being taken to speed up the process of securing financing for the multi-billion dollar project.

Representatives of the pipeline companies, their backers and U.S. government officials met in Washington last week to iron out some of the financial difficulties.

However, delays in financing and formal approval for the pipeline have impeded construction of the Canadian section, which would be used to ship proven Canadian gas reserves to the United States.

Canadian producers are anxious for permission to build the southern section.

Foothills Pipeline (Yukon) Ltd. of Calgary has asked the NEB for an export license to ship about 500 million cubic feet of surplus gas to the United States, with the intention of using the revenues from such sales for further pipeline financing.

The United States is the only foreign customer for Canadian oil and gas.

Gray talks aid with Chrysler

OTTAWA (CP) — Officials of Chrysler Corp. of Detroit met Monday with four cabinet ministers to negotiate federal aid for the company's Canadian subsidiary. But further talks are expected in another week to 10 days.

Industry Minister Herb Gray, Justice Minister Jean Chretien, Treasury Board President Donald Johnston and Trade Minister Ed Lumley met Chrysler president Lee Iacocca for two hours after which Gray said, "We're not ready to announce any decision today. But we did get down to some definite and important areas in return for federal government assistance to retool and re-equip."

Gray said he did not ask Chrysler to submit a new proposal to the government. "I wouldn't put it that way but there are certain things we're talking back and forth on."

But sources suggest the government is not satisfied with the present proposal from Chrysler Canada Ltd., in part because the request for loan guarantees and subsidies is disproportionately large compared with the aid given earlier this year to Chrysler's U.S. parent by Washington.

In return for possible guarantees and subsidies, the government wants commitments from Chrysler to increase jobs, production, research and development in Canada.

Gray, who represents the Windsor, Ont., area with two other cabinet ministers, said he wants "the best deal for the workers and the Canadian economy." Gray said he personally wants Chrysler employment to increase beyond the pre-layoff levels of the fall of 1979.

Pilot's chitchat caused crash?

TORONTO (CP) — A government lawyer says he could not find documents in federal air-crash investigators' files to show that unnecessary talk by pilots over the radio caused the 1978 crash of a Pacific Western Airlines Boeing 737.

John Haig, a lawyer with the federal ministry of justice, told an air safety inquiry Monday the safety investigators concluded that conversation of the crew was unnecessary and the ministry wanted to know why.

The inquiry learned investigators interviewed about 17 pilots after the crash at Cranbrook, which killed 43 people, but some of the notes from the interviews were destroyed.

John Sopinka, the inquiry's chief counsel, introduced a draft report by Dr. Francois Dube, one of the investigators, which indicated that pilot Christopher Miles had talked for a long time on his radio during the flight about an attractive woman dispatcher and the stock market.

The report said Miles was talking while the flight's first officer received advisories that a snowplow was on the runway at the Cranbrook airport.

The report said it was possible the first officer "never advised the pilot about the snowplow and the latter (the pilot) first noticed the equipment on the runway probably at touchdown."

The inquiry continues.

Montreal workers forced to return

QUEBEC (CP) — All parties in the Quebec national assembly joined late Monday night to vote unanimous approval of a law ending the 41-day strike by municipal blue-collar workers in Montreal.

In Montreal, workers were reported returning to their jobs shortly after midnight. It was expected that it would take weeks to catch up on the backlog of work left undone during the strike.

The workers are responsible for clearing snow and collecting garbage in parts of the city. Others maintain the city's traffic signal system.

Union workers also care for dolphins at the Montreal Aquarium where two of the mammals are now given, less than a 50 per cent chance of surviving. The dolphins had refused food, pining for their striking trainers.

The trainers returned last week before the strike was brought to an end, but it was too late for two of the aquarium's six dolphins who died Friday.

Now it may also be too late for two more of the trained dolphins.

His wife behind him, Roy accepts defeat in Frontenac

Grit byelection win shuts out Socreds

THETFORD MINES, Que. (CP) — The federal Liberals gained an extra Commons seat and shut out Social Credit once again as Socred leader Fabien Roy lost to Leopold Corriveau Monday in a deferred election in Frontenac riding.

But Corriveau's majority of slightly more than 3,000 votes was a lot less than the Liberals had hoped for, and permitted Roy to claim moral victory against what he called their "infernal election machine."

For Social Credit — which saw its five sitting MPs defeated in the Feb. 18 general election — a moral victory in Frontenac was not enough. The party's future, even as a rural protest party in Quebec, is in doubt.

Still, Roy was trying to put on a brave face.

"Social Credit isn't dead, the doctrine is still there, more and more people believe in it," he said. Roy attributed the slide in his party's fortunes to its failure to recruit new blood in the 1970s.

Corriveau, who received his fifth mandate to represent this largely-rural riding south of Quebec City, thanked Liberal caucus colleagues who paraded through the riding in the past week to support his candidacy.

But the corpulent 54-year-old MP said he'd have won, though perhaps with a smaller majority, even if his fellow Liberals hadn't pitched in.

"This wasn't Pierre Trudeau's win tonight, it was Leopold Corriveau's," he told cheering supporters.

The federal vote here was deferred a few days before Feb. 18 when Social Credit candidate Nelson Lessard died. Roy, who was defeated in neighboring Beauce-Sud riding last month, decided two weeks ago to run here in an attempt to keep a Creditiste presence in the Commons.

Churches, CLC seeking action against Argentina

OTTAWA (UPC) — Canada's major churches and the Canadian Labor Congress have urged the federal government to use its political and economic clout to halt what they called Argentina's "tyranny" of suppressing human rights.

In a brief presented Monday to External Affairs Minister Mark MacGuigan, the Canadian Labor Congress and officials of the Roman Catholic, Anglican and United churches along with the Canadian Jewish Congress urged the government to review its relations with Argentina, based on independent reports of persons who had "disappeared."

John Foster, chairman of the interchurch committee on human rights, said his group had grown impatient with Canada's lack of action toward a firmer stand against the Argentinian military regime, which took power four years ago Monday.

"I don't think there's any debate about the tyranny in Argentina, and there is no debate that something must be done," Foster said. "The question is how much and how fast."

He said that in 1978, Canada instituted a program aimed at securing the release of about 100 political prisoners.

"The Argentine governement did not respond very enthusiastically to this theme and only seven prisoners have come in the last two years," Foster said. "We feel Canada could do more."

Foster said the government could increase the pressure by threatening to cut off future deliveries of Candu nuclear reactor equipment.

CLC president Dennis McDermott called the Argentinian government's anti-trade union policies "reminiscent of the best shots of Hitler and Stalin."

"Of special concern was the case of the 'disappeared' or missing persons in Argentina, involving thousands of persons, trade unionists among them, who have presumably died in the torture chambers of the police or are still kept incommunicado in the detention camps," the leader of the 2.3-million-member labor organization said.

McDermott suggested an embargo on further Candu reactor parts to Argentina, which he said "has long resisted proper safeguards and steps to ensure non-proliferation."

Construction of a $2.1-billion Candu reactor is expected to be completed by 1982.

Ontario seeks savings in using waste for fuel

TORONTO (UPC) — Ontario plans to undertake a $3 billion, 15-year project to develop enough energy from waste to replace the equivalent of 27 million barrels of oil annually by 1995, Energy Minister Robert Welch said Monday.

"Our goal is to derive 3.2 percent of Ontario's primary energy needs from waste products by 1995," Welch said.

The highly industrialized province will attempt to harnass energy from such sources as municipal solid waste, forest and mill residues, agricultural waste, municipal sewage sludge and industrial by-product heat, Welch said.

"Properly utilized, we estimate energy from waste and biomass conversion could displace the equivalent of 27 million barrels of oil a year, worth about $400 million in 1979 terms," Welch said.

The energy department will work with municipalities and private industry to establish several major "Energy From Waste" systems. Welch said the entire 15-year program would require about $3 billion in investment.

"I expect a large percentage of this investment will come from the private sector with the balance coming from the government, municipalities, the Ontario Energy Corporation and Ontario Hydro," he said.

The energy department has budgeted $2 million this year for cost-sharing of feasibility studies and Welch said other financial and technical assistance will be available depending on the individual project.

Welch said his departmternt was already assessing proposed projects with the Ontario Paper Co. in Thorold, General Motors in St. Catharines and Nordfibre in North Bay.

"These companies would not want to become involved if they did not foresee an economic advantage, and I am sure others will follow their example as the program progresses," Welch said.

Quebec business voting 'no'

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian Federation of Independent Business says a survey taken in January shows that 63 per cent of its Quebec members intend to vote no in the referendum on sovereignty-association.

The survey, released Monday, also said 31 per cent of the businessmen will vote yes, while the rest were undecided.

As well, 68 per cent of respondents believe a majority of voters will vote no in the referendum expected in late May or June. Only 18 per cent thought voters would say yes while the rest were undecided.

John Bulloch, president of the 53,822-member federation, said in a speech to the Canadian Club that "the voice of the independent business community in Quebec, which has consistently created more than 60 per cent of all new jobs ... has answered no by a factor of more than two to one."

[illegible] speech followed the release of the study at a news conference, added he does not believe the referendum will be the end of the constitutional debate in Canada. "But it will probably be the beginning of the end of the status quo as we know it today."

The survey was conducted in the form of a questionnaire mailed to the group's 7,194 Quebec members. Of the 3,231 questionnaires that were returned, 2,720 were from French-speaking members and 511 were from English-speaking members.

Bulloch also praised the Quebec government for its [illegible] aimed at helping small businesses in the province. "All the provinces and the federal government can learn a great deal from the small business initiatives taken by Quebec," he said.

Trial irks judge

VANCOUVER (CP) — A county court judge criticized Crown lawyers Monday for prolonging trials by alleging conspiracies instead of proceeding on individual offences.

Judge Graham Ladner made the comment while convicting five women of conspiracy in a plan in which goods were stolen from Vancouver area stores and immediately returned for cash refunds.

"It is difficult to understand why the Crown proceeds on an indictment for conspiracy in cases where the evidence is conclusive as to the substantive offences, even in instances where the Crown may consider that the evidence of conspiracy is equally as clear," the judge said.

The judge said inevitably the trial would take longer than if the indictment contained counts for the substantive offences alone.

"This extended trial period is unfair to the accused and to the courts whose time is expended for such longer period when such time so often could be better expended in keeping the trial list more current."

But Crown counsel Judith Bowers, asked about the judge's remarks, said that the matter was given great consideration and, while agreeing with the judge there was ample evidence on several counts, said it was decided that the case was a serious widespread scheme and warranted proceeding as a conspiracy.

Found guilty in connection with the conspiracy and remanded until April 23 for sentence were Sandra Lynn Anderson, 23, Terry June Hildebrand, 18, Shelley Anne Muckle, 19, Christine Barbara Tucker, 23, and Jacquiline Anne Fenton, 18.

Crown to hold rights

All rights to uranium discovered during general mineral exploration in B.C. during the next seven years will be held by the Crown, the provincial energy ministry said Monday.

The ministry outlined in a news release a series of steps for implementing the seven-year moratorium on uranium mining and exploration announced by the government Feb. 27.

No rights to uranium will be issued during the moratorium, but if it is lifted after seven years, the rights to uranium found during that period will go to holders of the mineral claim or placer lease at that date.

The Mineral Act also will be waived for holders of mineral claims, mining leases and placer leases presently containing uranium.

The ministry said ore bodies being prepared for production of such commodities as molybdenum, gold or silver, but which contain small amounts of uranium, will be encouraged to proceed.

Council retreats

NANAIMO (CP) — City council removed a controversial section of its anti-noise bylaw Monday night which threatened to land aldermen and civic workers in court.

The bylaw, expected to be formally adopted next Monday, is now without the clause which would have directed bylaw officers to enter private homes to remove barking dogs.

Laywers here said the clause was illegal and could have resulted in bylaw officers being charged with trespassing and theft and aldermen charged with counselling a crime.

The bylaw was passed two weeks ago but never signed by Mayor Frank Ney.

P.J. Pearce, a 32-year-old Norwalk, Calif., man arrested on suspicion of robbery, apparently wanted a smoke so badly that he abandoned his getaway car to buy a pack of cigarettes. According to sheriff's deputy Mike Nogakoa, Pearce was arrested after a robbery at a bank here. An unidentified gunman, believed to be Pearce's accomplice, had confronted a teller demanding money, Nogakoa said, and then fled out the rear door with $1,046 in cash. But when the gunman reached the getaway car, it was locked, and the driver was missing. Pearce, the alleged driver, was down the street at a liquor store buying cigarettes, Nogakoa said. The gunman frantically fled on foot.

Linda Ronstadt

Now that chances of maybe occupying the White House as the nation's first lady have faded, Linda Ronstadt has decided to make her acting debut instead. She'll be featured this summer in the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta Pirates of Penzance — in the role of Mabel for Joe Papp's Public Theatre in New York's Central Park.

Nobel Peace Prize winner Mother Teresa received another honor on the weekend when India presented her the Star of India, that country's highest civilian award. "It is a gift of God and I have accepted it in the name of all the religions and all those who serve God," said the 69-year-old nun who won the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize.

Ever wonder what happens when Barbara Frum, CBC's As It Happens host, dials a wrong number? Hoping to be connected with Toronto teacher Rod Stewart in Chunking, China, Ms. Frum somehow got the lines mixed and woke up former finance minister John Crosbie. Frum mused about the coincidence later: "What are the odds of waking up John Crosbie at 6 a.m. in China and asking him where a Canadian school teacher was?"

Amanda Lear — England's "disco queen" — has gotten right in the middle of the disco vs. rock squabble, and she's come down on behalf of rock. At a Stockholm press conference, the model-turned-singer abdicated her title, saying "disco is rubbish." She then set out to prove it — singing several of her disco numbers concluding, "in most cases it is an insult to the record buyer ... I give the Village People my title — they can be the queens."

abby

Dear Abby:

A few weeks ago I read in your column, Confidential to Thirteen and Scared to Death of My Stepdad. It weighed heavily on my mind because at 13, I, too, was scared to death of my step-father who had been sexually molesting me since I was barely 11. He was even violent at times.

When I got married at 18, my stepfather was still after me. One day he came to my home and tried to overpower me; I pumped seven bullets into his body and killed him on the spot.

I stood trial for second-degree murder. The jury deliberated 10 minutes and ruled it self-defence.

Now, after two years with a psychologist I am finally beginning to feel human.

I pray with all my heart that the 13-year-old girl takes your advice and tells the police or someone else who can help her. The fear of being molested is terrible to live with. I know.

Been Through it

Dear Abby:

A widow complained because her friends never got around to introducing her to any eligible men.

May I say a word from the man's point of view? I was 53 when my wife died. Soon, well-meaning friends started to fix me up with eligible women.

Good ole Bill and his cute wife, Jeanette, had me to dinner. The only other guest was Jeanette's widowed mother — a pleasant little lady (about 60) whose only claim to fame was her ability to make pie. Frankly, she was not my cup of tea.

Then good ole Charlie and his kind-hearted wife, Lucille, fixed me up with a "terrific" woman who had loads of money and was a whiz at bridge. Well, I wasn't looking for bridge, or a meal ticket, so that didn't work out.

Abby, if people really want to help singles meet someone, they should invite them to a casual cocktail party with lots of people. An eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation is not fertile soil in which the fragile seedling of romance can flower.

Terry

Dear Terry:

Congratulations. But don't knock the one-to-one date. There's a lot of loneliness in the world, and although you may prefer the large cocktail party, it is not the happiest hunting ground for all singles.

Dear Abby:

Anonymously Yours told of not visiting her 87-year-old father because her stepmother is a non-stop talker.

Please tell her more strongly to visit them! Our dear father, now dead, was denied frequent visits from his children due to our over-aggressive, talkative stepmother. As a result, my children never got to know my father as they should have.

Another Anonynous

Dear Another:

Thanks for offering my readers some valuable advice. It's free to them, but you have already paid for it. And dearly.

Panache!

Elegance for the '80s takes on the dimension of art with these new hair styles from Vidal Sassoon.

Influenced by masters such as Picasso, Braque, Kandinsky and Malevich, Sassoon's stylists have created a look they call soft cubism. The hard lines of cubist graphics are pared away to offer a style and shape that evokes the classic cubist element without taking from the natural curves of head and face.

At top is Snake Charmer, a style which matches false hair with rhinestones and lumilar tongue waves through hair knotted asymmetrically on top.

At right, another bob with more symmetrical shaping involving graduated edges and cut-in waves. Like the first bob, element of asymmetry is brought in by having extra volume on one side.

Europe rediscovers a wardrobe classic

By PADDY CALISTRO
Los Angeles Times

The sweatshirt is flexing its muscle in European fall ready-to-wear collections this week. At the same time, sewing enthusiasts are stitching up their own versions at home. This is one of the few times in recent home-sewing history that patterns for current Paris looks have been available before the silhouettes hit the designers' runways.

The explanation: The North American classic has been rediscovered by the Europeans.

Richard Segrin, design director at McCall Pattern Co., says jogging suit and sweatshirt patterns are currently the most popular styles in the firm's catalogue. Perhaps that's because women are needled by high retail prices on pullovers that only have six seams and pull-on pants that only have five. When a silhouette gets that uncomplicated, consumers realize how easy it is to sew and save.

Those savings can be great, depending on fabric and notions choices, says Jane Schenck, project director of the American Home Sewing Association.

"Research shows that women can save anywhere from 25 per cent to 75 percent by sewing their clothes at home," she explains.

To prove that sewing at home can be as fashionably versatile as it is economical, representatives of four major pattern companies were asked to take a basic sweatsuit pattern such as the ones being seen in Europe, and come up with fabric suggestions to make it work out anywhere — at the office, a party, a movie and, of course, the gym.

No-sweat fabrics such as chiffon, lace and Qiana dress up the basic track suit. Trims such as ribbons and lace can turn even the plainest pattern into a romantic evening look.

For those who want extra dash on the jogging track, Simplicity suggests actually painting the fabric. A few artful touches of paint can turn ordinary sweatshirt fleece into your own designer look.

And in case you didn't think a track suit could ever be office apparel, Butterick has developed a pattern made in a sweatery knit. In this case, the dressed-up fabric and citified accessories take this jogging suit off the track and into the board room.

Antabuse not a cure for alcoholism

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I recall that you once wrote about the drug Antabuse being able to cure alcoholism. We have just learned that my brother is an alcoholic and I wonder if this is a drug he could use. We are desperate for help.

Mrs. D.L.

Dear Mrs. L.:

Let me immediately point out that Antabuse, a trade name for disulfiram, is not a cure for alcoholism. Rather, it is a specialized additional approach to the problem. Often it is used in conjunction with other forms of treatment.

Basically, Antabuse is used to control any impulse to have a drink. Long ago, an interesting observation was made in Denmark. People working in a rubber industry and exposed to disulfiram were found to develop an increased sensitivity to alcohol. Studies were then made for the potential use of disulfiram to control alcoholism.

When alcoholics are first given the drug they are warned with repeated emphasis that the combination of Antabuse and even the slightest amount of alcohol can produce the most unpleasant reactions. Within minutes after drinking alcohol, the alcoholic can develop nausea, vomiting, sweating, dizziness, difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest.

With the intake of larger amounts of alcohol, far more serious problems can result. Cardiovascular collapse, convulsions and even death are possibilities.

Unless one is psychologically prepared to completely abstain from all alcohol, Antabuse can be a real danger. By "all" alcohol I mean even the amount that is used in cough medicine or the slight amount that might be hidden in a dessert.

Disulfiram is a useful drug among people who are well motivated to control their addiction.

Dear Doctor:

I wear contact lenses. I hear that in Europe there are now contact lenses which can be worn for months at a time.

L.O.

Dear Miss O.:

Continuous-wear lenses have been used in Canada and Europe for years. The federal Drug Administration of the United States has been investigating these lenses and still has not given complete sanction for their continuous use.

There are a number of ongoing studies to insure the total freedom from danger in the use of these lenses before they are approved in America. Not all the answers are in yet, concerning the advantages and disadvantages of leaving lenses in the eyes for a long period of time.

Spring colors are black and white

NEW YORK, N.Y.-- Black and white will be seen all over in women's fashions this spring -- sometimes with red, but most times as an eye-catching duo.

Some of the most stunning graphics of spring rely on this play-off of positive-negative contrast. Used in blocks by Yves Saint Laurent with the light areas framed by borders of dark braiding and vice versa, the effect is highly dramatic.

Many influences (Picasso, in particular, for YSL) contribute to the graphically strong fashion of spring. Taking off from Picasso's costume designs for the ballet The Three-Cornered Hat, Saint Laurent picked up such motifs as the wave stripe, the zigzag, asterisks and the dot and scallop pattern, as well as the tricorn hat itself. Besides his translations in black and white, Saint Laurent drew colors from Picasso, heightening their intensity.

Karl Lagerfeld of Chloe stressed black with white in abstract prints, and Givenchy divided chemise dresses into verticals and squares of black or navy against white. In their couture designs, both Givenchy and Marc Bohan of Dior used jailbird stripes on the diagonal and horizontally for striking suits and dresses. Some new geometric prints recall the optical illusions of op artists.

The mathematical game of chromatic divisions has been taken up by U.S. designers, too. Many spring suits come with dark jackets and white skirts (or the reversed order). Mary McFadden splits crystal-pleated silk evening turnouts into areas of black and white.

For spring several other key questions also arise: How short the skirt? How long the pants? How low the waist?

SKIRTS. Some are straight, some pleated, some swinging and circular, a few are padded at the hips like panniers. All definitely are shorter: just covering the knee, or 1 inch below, for day, as short as decency--and the looks of the leg--allow for evening. Many late-day skirts are long in back (some are practically train-length) and ultrashort in front.

PANTS. Cutoff lengths are new. Perry Ellis, who did the short pannier skirts, also features midcalf baggies. But he and other designers showed every length from shoetop to capri, Bermuda and short-short. Trouser proportions are as important as lengths. Pleattops or yoketops with gathers give the widened baggy effect that are in vogue even for jeans. Jogger styles in stretch terry also have baggy lines. Skin-fit pants tend to be stretch types. Tailored trousers are straight and cuffed, sometimes (but not always) tapered.

WAISTLINE. Usually marked with a sash or a belt where nature placed it, but wandering downward. Acceptable alternatives are the dropped torso dress of flapper fame and the waistless chemise.

Meet Gemma Zawadski and her electric nanny

LONDON (AP) - Four-week-old Gemma Zawadski has a computer for a nanny.

Instead of an apron and a cozy lap, it has tape drives and typewriter keys. Instead of a nickname like Nana, it is called ORCA III. But it soothes Gemma when she cries, tells her a bedtime story and will teach her English, French and German when she starts to talk.

"About the only thing it can't do is change the baby's nappies," said Gemma's father, Richard Zawadski, the 28-year-old computer consultant who built ORCA III.

ORCA III is more than a nanny. Zawadski has programmed it to do household chores as well — turning on lights, opening the garage door and guarding the house against burglars and thieves.

"Pretty soon I can just ring up from work and have it switch on the microwave oven before I come home," he boasted.

Last November, for $6,600, Zawadski bought the American ITT 2020 home computer to use in his business and educational work. The baby arrived Feb. 29.

"I think my daughter has been born in an age when technology is going to have a bigger impact than ever before," said Zawadski. "I wanted to introduce my daughter to computers at an early age."

So he purchased several pieces of hardware to expand the computer's range to include speech synthesis and voice recognition. With the help of his wife, who is an engineer, he rewired their home in St. Albans, outside London, and rigged up a set of microphones in the nursery.

ORCA III, named after a British science-fiction TV show, sits in the utility room, but its power extends throughout the house.

Zawadski said he programmed the computer to switch on when the baby begins to cry and to talk back in a soothing tone reproducing both his and his wife's voice.

"If Gemma stirs in the night, the computer will react to the sound of her voice and start talking to her," he said.

ORCA III also is programmed to make up its own bedtime story, always beginning with "Once upon a time" and ending with "They lived happily ever after," Zawadski said. The plot is up to the computer's choosing from sample stories fed into its memory.

Gemma is too young to talk, but her nanny is ready.

ORCA III is programmed for three languages — English, French and German — to teach her vocabulary and correct pronunciation.

Zawadski said he plans to show his daughter how to program ORCA III by the time she starts school. But he worries that if she becomes too good, she would use the computer to play tricks on her parents.

But isn't the computer nanny too much like George Orwell's 1984?

"You cannot replace a parent's love and we don't intend to," said Zawadski. "But I can see it being a great help on occasions."

youth clinic

Dear Mr. Vichert: I have a friend whose parents abuse her. One night her father hit her and she came to me about it. I discussed the situation with another friend to see if we could help. Somehow she found out about it. She came to see me and started hitting me. She's 15 and I'm 13 and she wants to continue our fight.

In a way I feel sorry for her. I'm the one she's taking her frustrations out on. She has threatened to hurt me badly. I was only trying to help her and I want her to understand that.

Answer: It does seem unfair that you got hurt when you were trying to help someone else. If your friend is being hurt by her father, you are right that she does need help. If you know it is continuing you should call the Children's Aid Society and let them know. They will treat your call in confidence. If your friend continues to threaten to hurt you, then I think you should let your parents know, so they can help you find a solution. You are a good friend in that you want to help, but if your friend continues to threaten you then I suggest you stop seeing her until she calms down.

I think you have also realized that when someone shares something personal with you that it is best to keep it to yourself.

Dear Dr. Levine: I'm 17 years old and I'm in jail. Ever since I was 9, I've stolen things and caused trouble for my parents. I'm finishing a nine month jail term for breaking and entering. I asked the courts to recommend a doctor, but nothing happened. My mother works and my father is in the Air Force. My mother doesn't like me and my father isn't home much.They just moved to Winnipeg without telling me — I found out from my sister.

I've never lived on my own and I can't handle money very well. It seems everytime I try to straighten out I get into trouble again. I miss my parents even though I don't think they miss me.

I don't want to go back to jail again. I want to be a normal human who works, goes home and leads a normal life. My girlfriend and I got along fine until I was sent to jail.

Answer: A very sad letter. A young man in jail. rejected by his parents, lonely, disconsolate. Demoralized.

A dramatic but unfortunately not uncommon story. There are many young people, boys and girls, who are in various forms of detention, "paying" for misbehavior or crimes. And sadly, the methods we have of rehabilitating these "prisoners" or "wards" are not nearly as effective as we'd like.

There are intensive efforts to improve this situation, to develop new ways of helping young people who have gone astray. It is a measure of a society's humanity and compassion, the extent to which it attempts to rehabilitate rather than be constantly punitive (although punishment is sometimes necessary). But what if we have fair techniques that work? It is incumbent upon us to develop these new methods — not the least reason being that a person in jail costs the society much more (in dollars, as well as misery) as that person working outside.

You are in the frustrating situation of having asked for psychotherapuetic help, to no avail. It certainly sounds like you can use it. Unfortunately relatively few counsellors or psychotherapitsts work in these institutions. But you are young, and you will be getting out soon — both facts in your favor.

Upon your release, contact a youth clinic, or social agency. Try to restart your life. Try to reconciliate (again) with your parents, but if you are rejected, don't give up hope. Concentrate on the good and rewarding relationships that you do have. Try school again, or learn a skill. Above all — Hang in there!

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Old plate could be worth a fortune

the collectors

By KEN RICHARDSON

Plate collecting has come into its own these days and is, indeed, No. 1 in the limited Edition hierarchy throughout the world, with more than 6 million collectors.

The 1895 original was issued by Bing and Grondahl of Denmark launching their commemorative Christmas series, the production of which has continued annually to the present time. Issued at a mere 50 cents that early plate is now estimated to be worth about $5,000. Rosenthal of Germany followed suit with their Christmas annual in 1907, Royal Copenhagen of Denmark in 1908, Royal Delft of Holland in 1917 — porcelain makers were the trail blazers among the famous "blue and white" plates.

Over the years since famous makers across the world have put out editions, single or in series, presenting a wide range of subjects. Materials have varied and include gold, silver, glass, copper and, of course, porcelain — according to the manufacturer's specialty. Canvas artists have flocked in support of this great new art form and some have enormously enhanced their reputations in this field.

Possibly the greatest single impetus to plate collecting arose from the performance of the 1965 Lalique of France. Entitled "Deux Oiseaux" this etched crystal plate increased in value from its initial price of $25 to a figure approaching $2,000 10 years later. The special significance of this event lay in the fact that the plate was made of glass, not porcelain — up to then, the traditionally accepted medium.

Factors affecting value include the maker, rarity, the artist, the medium, the subject and even whether the plate is issued singly or in series.

Individual and chain jewelers carry selected plate issues. Such retailers can sometimes obtain new or back releases on request. Sometimes the search becomes difficult and I have been able to offer some guidance or assistance as to whereabouts of sources. Collectors shows have been known to present displays. Members of plate clubs can be most helpful.

Buy only if the plate appeals to you. Investment should always be a secondary consideration. Check the maker's credentials. Note Edition size; 500 may be too small, 20,000 to large to sustain buyer interest in the second or collectors market. A good "workable" average would be 10,000.

Although manufacturers attempt to maintain one issue price in all areas of distribution the international nature of this collectable make consistency somewhat difficult, if not impossible, at times. Particularly in view of the present fluctuating exchange rates. Once the bulk of the plates has been sold the prices are then subject to the laws of supply and demand.

Q. Can you tell me the process by which restoration work on porcelain can be revealed? R.R.N.

A. A certain way is through the use of ultra violet light, which pinpoints difference in color. Another method is to rap the suspect areas with a coin; the sound will differ from the rest of the plate.

Q. I would like to auction off some family antiques, but feel I should impose reserve prices on some of them. Does this protect me in some degree? D.P.

A. The reserve price is the very lowest you considered acceptable. If the bidding fails to reach that figure, the auctioneer will return the item to you on payment of a commission, somewhat less than the price you would have paid had a sale resulted.

Putting the bite on old George

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Stories that George Washington wore wooden false teeth turn out to be tall tales — but what the first U.S. president really had in his mouth is even stranger, a UCLA dentist said.

At various times during his two terms of office, Washington's awkward dentures included such materials as lead, cow's teeth, carved elephant and walrus tusk, hippopotamus teeth and human teeth, said Prof. Reidar Sognnaes.

"He must have had a very difficult time talking and eating," said Sognnaes, who said he has been interested in carved ivory as an art form for many years.

The founding dean of UCLA's School of Dentistry has studied "perhaps the most famous teeth in American history" off and on for about 10 years and has examined six surviving sets of Washington's dentures. Sognnaes even reconstructured several sets using the same materials as the originals.

He outlined his study at a conference of the American Association for Dental Research.

Schoolchildren for years have heard that Washington is never shown smiling in portraits because he had false teeth made of wood. This legend is also used to explain Washington's pouting lips, as seen on millions of dollar bills.

But Sognnaes said in an interview: "There is absolutely no scientific basis for the widespread impression that Washington ever wore wooden teeth. That is simply a myth."

He said elaborately carved and inlaid wooden teeth were crafted in China 100 years before Washington's first inauguration ih 1789. By Washington's time, wood had long since been replaced, mostly with carved ivory but with many other materials as well.

Sognnaes said Washington's pout probably stemmed from the fact that denture adhesive hadn't been invented. The false teeth were held in place by two springs that pushed them up and forward.

"I suppose that when he talked, he almost always had to talk with his mouth closed or else they would come out," Sognnaes said.

Dentures of the time were hand-carved, often by artists or instrument makers.

The fit was inevitably imperfect, Sognnaes said, "since the trial and error way of doing this must have been incredible."

When Washington first became president, at the age of 57, he had only one tooth left, probably because of gum disease, the dentist said. A hole cut through the ivory base of his dentures let that tooth poke through. The rest were made of carved ivory and some human teeth, including one taken from Washington's own mouth, Sognnaes said.

Perhaps the most interesting of Washington's carved dentures included an assortment of carved materials mounted on a lead base.

"That's just ridiculous today," Sognnaes said. "It was also dangerous. If you drank port wine the acid (in the wine) would react with the lead" with potentially poisonous results.

The 'preppy' look is in

'Classic' padded-shoulder jacket is worn with baggy jeans

By TIMOTHY HAWKINS
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — For men who want to be in fashion this fall, the French, Italian and New York menswear designers all have the same basic message: dress traditional. This means preppy looks. Or the kind of style the Duke of Windsor made classic. Or even something as simple as the Madison Avenue gray flannel suit.

The message from California designers is also back to basics. But when they say dress traditional, the translation is more likely to be: wear a sweat shirt.

This classic top, part of California's "dress casual," tradition shows up in several lines here — a kind of West Coast version of the button-down shirt that will be a wardrobe basic in the East this fall.

"Of course, sweat shirt now has a broad definition — anything with a crew neck and a blouson feeling," says designer Van-Martin Rowe.

His sweat shirts are done in new fabrics such as mock crocodile satin, or color-spliced wool knit or rayon challis with sunglasses airbrushed on the chest. "You don't wear these sweat shirts to the gym," he says. "You wear them everywhere else." Rowe shows his sweat shirts as the separate that ties his line together. They're worn under his zip-front wool knit sailing parka or under his lightly constructed sport jacket sewn with vertical cording on the chest. They're worn over small-collared button-down shirts, or over his jumpsuits trimmed with twill tape.

A. Smile's new "soft wear" line includes sweat shirts and sweat pants souped up with such prints as bunches of balloons, kites, cartoon characters, sneakers and roller skates. There are also styles in a soft, wrinkled gauze and in a waffled fabric in bright colors. "They're cleaned-up sweat looks you can wear during a business day," says A. Smile's Jay Kester. "These are ideas that would be difficult to sell in New York or Chicago, but not here."

A. Smile's most innovative look for fall is its Western and baggy jeans done in vertical channelquilt denim, bright engineer stripes and houndstooth checks. It is no accident that A. Smile's line looks right for spring-summer as well as fall. 'What's fall?" asks Kester. "We have almost no seasons in the West."

In addition to his strong preppie statement for fall (the best is his oxford shirt with polo-style knit collar), J. Rodolfo's Joey Jimenez has done bold-colored sweat shirts appliqued with geometrics or trimmed at the sleeves, neck and waist in off-white.

Madman's Steve Mills has two life-style themes in his line: the spectator-sport look and the prep-classic look. For active and inactive sports, there are sweat pants with piping, canvas pants with elasticized waists and ankles, and airbrushed sweat shirts. Madras shirts, button-downs, chino pants, cable knit and Fair Isle sweaters are for the new preppy. For new wavers, Mills says he's doing a loose-cut '40s style shirt in rayon and challis prints and polka dots.

Levi Strauss' lumberjacks and cow punchers of the past will look more like country squires and dude ranchers this fall. "This is traditional, investment clothing," says Levi's Lee Walczak of the David Hunter line, which includes tweedy jackets with hacking pockets and leather buttons, tweedy vest and pullover sweaters, rich plaid shirts, velour turtlenecks, and navy blazers.

Looking great!

By RENA PAUL

How can I achieve a special look for a grand evening? I prefer quiet elegance to heavy make-up and usually use hair ornaments or a single piece of jewelry worn at the waist, shoulder or evening bag. Do you have any other suggestions?

Vivian G.

Dear Vivian:

Have you thought of flowers for your hair, waist, shoulders or evening bag? How about brushing some gold simmer over cheek bones and shoulders? This catches the light and creates a warm and dramatic effect.

Dear Rena Paul:

We have just become the proud parents of an active three-year old boy. Our adopted son loves the outdoors and we are looking forward to a summer at the beach. My husband and I are English/Irish, have very fair skin and always use sun hats and protective skin care preparations. Our son is of African descent and almost black. Is his skin colour sufficient protection or could he get sunburned?

Liz and Warren T.

Dear Liz and Warren:

Congratulations on the arrival of your son! Yes, black people get sunburned, too. Once their skin is damaged it often takes longer for scars and blemishes to disappear. So, all 3 of you should wear hats and use skin care preparations containing a sun screen.

Dear Rena Paul:

My dad is always teasing mom and me because we spent a lot of time bathing and hair washing. He says the bath must have been invented by a woman. Is he right?

Jane B.

Dear Jane

I don't know who invented the bath, but the custom is probably as old as mankind. We find references to bathing in mythology and in historical accounts. the 4th 5th centuries B.C., for instance, people in India bathed in rivers and scraped their bodies with animal jaw bones and crocodile teeth. In ancient Greece only men had the right to take baths. Aren't you glad we don't live in ancient Greece?

Dear Rena Pal:

I heard that I can no longer use mascara when I get my contatct lenses. Is this true?

Lyn F.

Dear Lyn:

No, it is not. But you must choose a product that goes on smoothly and clings securely to your lashes — no powdered or old mascara, no lash lengthener, no makeup on the inner rim of the eyelid. The idea is to prevent fine hairs, crumbled mascara and other foreign particles from slipping under the lenses where they could cause severe irritation.

How to sever the ties that bind

By MAUREEN EARLY
Newsday

"All of our friends' children are gone, with careers and homes of their own. Where have we gone wrong?"

An elderly mother is talking about her grown children. Complaints of being ignored and treated with hostility by their adult offspring are common among parents, but psychologist Howard Halpern has found that for some, like this woman, the problem, is too much contact.

In researching his book, No Strings Attached (A Guide to a Better Relationship with Your Grown Up Child) (Simon and Schuster, $9.95), Halpern discovered, to his suprise, that a great many parents complained of too much contact.

Such complaints are based, he said, on divorced children returning to their parental homes, often with a youngster or two of their own in tow; on grown children who fear to leave a safe haven to establish a home of their own, or on offspring who are emotionally ready to leave, but who, for economic reasons, cannot afford to set up housekeeping on their own.

In such situations a new way of living has to be formulated between the generations. And there will be clashes, Halpern said. "There are always clashes when arbitrary circumstances prevent the separateness that should be taking place at that age."

Living at home, however, does not necessarily mean that a child is stuck in his development, Halpern said. "Some children live at home with parents, and they get along very well as separate people. Problems occur when parents become too intrusive and the kids don't apply common courtesy.

On the other hand, parents may sense that their child is staying home because "he is afraid of the world out there. He is afraid to be self-supporting." When this happens, said Halpern, the adult child either gets depressed or becomes abusive, regarding his parents as jailers, while knowing full well that his refuge is a prison of his own making.

What can parents with grown children at home do?

Halpern, a former president of the American Academy of Psychotherapists who practices in New York City, had this to say:

— First, check out your own motives. Do you inwardly want to maintain the situation because you like control and fear abandonment? Often, parents don't want to face their own lonliness. Both may be afraid that without the children, there is no real basis for their relationship anymore. "If you do have these negative needs, they will come out in subtle ways that are in collusion with needs of your offspring."

— If you truly want to correct the situation, you must approach the child, saying something like this: "The situation is just no good for either of us. I'm not throwing you out right now, but we do need to think of a way in which you can be self-sufficient as soon as possible."

— Explore the constructive steps you can take. It may be locating good professional training for the child. It may be a brief period of supporting the child outside the home alone. It might be underwriting professional counseling. The idea is to get the growth process starting again.

Runcie takes throne

CANTERBURY, England (Reuter) — With a fanfare of trumpets and to the applause of religious leaders from all over the world, Robert Runcie was enthroned today as the 102nd Archbishop of Canterbury.

He took his seat on the ancient marble throne of St. Augustine but immediately disowned the pageantry of one of Britain's most colourful national events.

The 58-year-old archbishop told the biggest and most representative congregation ever assembled in Canterbury Cathedral that Christianity is better expressed by the work done for the poor by Mother Teresa of Calcutta, the Roman Catholic nun who won the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize.

The new Primate of all England and honorary leader of the world's nearly 70 million Anglicans then turned to five Roman Catholic cardinals, bearded Eastern Orthodox churchmen and leading Protestant divines to deliver his appeal for Christian unity.

"It fill my heart with great hope to see so many Christian leaders assembled here, from every part of the globe," the former Bishop of St. Albans said.

Warning on Mideast

CALGARY (CP) — James Schlesinger, former United States energy secretary, came to Calgary Monday to issue a warning to the oil industry and to Canada.

Schlesinger said Canada and other countries of the free world are facing a peril in the Middle East.

"The time has come for Canada and the U.S. to face the hard facts," he said.

"For the next decade, energy policies will be inextricable from the foreign policies of the free world."

While Canada, with the recent oil finds off the coast of Newfoundland, could achieve energy self-sufficiency in the next decade, the same does not hold true for the U.S., Japan or England which are increasingly dependent on oil supplies in the Persian Gulf.

"Therefore, continued access to oil supplies in that region is indespensible to the free world as we have known it since 1945."

Schlesinger said Canada has had, if not a free ride, "a relatively easy ride with regard to international issues during the U.S. pre-eminence as the world power. But that situation is changing.

"I urge you to look to your own defence efforts because I suspect Canada has not been investing enough in military hardware."

West's old TV programs top the ratings in China

PEKING (Reuter) — The starting time of a concert in Peking by a leading foreign classical pianist was altered so the audience would not miss an episode of Man from Atlantis, the first American television series to be shown on Chinese television.

When it first started early this year, the series took China by storm and just about everyone who could get to a television on a Saturday night to watch it, did so.

The enthusiasm is a result of having a piece of pure fantasy entertainment on the screen, something rarely seen before on Chinese TV, always noted in the past for its emphasis on propaganda.

"We must educate the people not with a long face but by supplying them with programs of every kind," said Chen Hairen, assistant director of the Chinese central television station.

"Our main purpose is to educate the people to build China into a modern socialist country, but we still lack experience on how to make TV more vivid and entertaining owing to past years."

He was referring to the decade or more of Cultural Revolution that began in 1966 when all forms of Chinese culture stagnated, primarily as a result of the authoritarian whim of the then-party Chairman Mao Tse-tung's wife, Jiang Qing, one of the purged "Gang of Four" radicals.

"During the time of the Gang of Four, there were three films, eight songs and eight model revolutionary operas which we were permitted to screen, and we were forced to repeat them over and over again until nobody wanted to watch television," Chen said.

Things have changed now, although a typical night's TV program in Peking would seem very tedious to an average Western viewer.

Official estimates show China has about three million TV sets for a population of one billion, but no one knows what the total viewing audience is since a large proportion of the sets are in parks, factory canteens, dormitories and other public places.

Most of China has one channel, although Peking, Shanghai and Canton each have an extra local station.

A normal evening's program might begin with an hour-long feature on semiconductors followed by an English language lesson. The news and the evening's main feature — a film or a Chinese opera — with station close-down at about 10:30 p.m.

Advertisements have begun to make their appearance on TV. The first local advertisement on Peking TV was in January, while the first one placed by a foreign company, a Japanese watch firm, went on early this month.

Until the middle of last year Chinese TV screened new films at the same time as they were playing in films around the country.

Probably as a result of the increase in privately-owned television sets, film operators began to find their box-office takings were suffering and they forced central television to wait six months after the initial release of a film before showing it on TV.

Man from Atlantis, starring Patrick Duffy, is the first series, Chinese or foreign, ever to be shown on Chinese TV.

The Chinese have recently bought three series from the BBC — David Copperfield, Anna Karenina and Marie Curie — which are expected to be screened later this year and next year after they have been dubbed into Chinese.

"We originally wanted to buy the American series based on the book Roots, but the producers refused to sell it to us for some reason we are not sure of," Chen said.

Bing's boy makes his way

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Harry Lillis Crosby III, Bing's namesake son, is not a chip off the old block except that he aspires to a career in show business.

Twenty-one-year-old Harry has a thatch of curly dark hair, brown eyes and an athletic build. Bing, on the other hand, was prematurely bald, blue-eyed and not exactly Atlas.

While Harry doesn't resemble his famous father physically, neither does he have Bing's diffidence, the casual flair that characterized Crosby's performances in movies, TV and radio throughout his career.

Harry has kept a low profile since Bing died of a heart attack in Madrid, Spain, in 1977.

He has been less visible than his brother and sister who have both been involved in public enterprises.

His sister Mary Frances, recently married, is one of the stars of the hit TV series, Dallas. Brother Nathaniel, 18, and a freshman at the University of Miami, directs the annual Bing Crosby Golf Tournament in Pebble Beach, Calif.

Harry has spent most the time since his father's death studying at the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts, purposely avoiding the limelight.

As an 18-year-old, Harry studied classical guitar at the California Institute of the Arts, leaving the Disney-founded school to join his father on a world-wide tour.

"I had a 20-minute spot on Dad's concert tour, playing the guitar and singing," Harry recalled. "But Dad postponed the tour for six months after we played the London Palladium.

"It was too late for me to enrol in school back in the United States so I auditioned for LAMDA — that's the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts — and they accepted me. A week later Dad died.

"My father and I were incredibly close. It was a terrible shock. But the family all pulled together and took care of the funeral in California.

"After that I went back to LAMDA and asked them not to tell anyone I was enrolled there. I just disappeared into my studies."

On completing his training last summer, Harry took an eight-week hiatus, promising to return to LAMDA for a 12-week tour of Europe in a play. He flew to New York and landed the lead role in a low-budget horror movie, Friday The 13th due for release this spring.

While in New York, Harry won a part in Little Lies, a Broadway play scheduled to go into rehearsals this month. It was a jubilant young man who returned to England to fulfill his commitment to the European tour.

Harry flew to Hollywood earlier this year to costar in the pilot of a projected new TV series, Pony Express.

"It was something I could work in before rehearsals started on the Broadway play," the young man said. "I rented an apartment in New York and was all ready to become a stage actor — which is what I'd been trained for in London.

"The other day I got word the financial backers pulled out and the play wouldn't be done after all."

Harry, who earned $50 a week touring Europe and $750 minimum pay for his first movie role, need never worry about finances. He is well provided for by the terms of his father's will.

Still, Harry is determined to establish himself as a performer without capitalizing on his famous name.

"I worked in Friday The 13th for several days before the director even knew my last name," Harry said. "And it was a week before most of the guys in the crew of the pilot show realized I was Bing's son.

"Having a couple of famous parents doesn't mean anything in the business anymore. Producers aren't going to invest a lot of money in a kid just because he's from a famous family.

"I couldn't live with myself if I exploited my name. I could never have a real career based on that sort of thing. That's why I haven't done any talk shows. Why should I?

"What have I accomplished on my own to justify being on a show like that? And I don't want to be put on display and compared with my father.

"I think I've had good training for an acting and musical career but you never know until you've had a chance to apply the training. I've never seen myself on screen or on TV except the shows we did as a family when Dad was alive.

"My training included the classics, Shakespeare, Marlow and more recent playwrights like Pinter and Chekov. But I learned more on my 12-week tour playing Elizabethan lute music and performing as an actor.

"The dust hasn't settled since the Broadway play fell through. I'm trying to find out if my career lies with acting or music or maybe both. There is a lot of trial and error ahead for me.

"My father was a natural. I loved Dad very much, I'm flattered when people ask me about him, but now I must find my own way."

Daring British robbers get silver worth $11M

LONDON (Reuter) — Police are looking for six gunmen and a bogus policeman who hijacked a truckload of silver ingots worth $11.4 million in Britain's biggest bullion robbery.

The gang took less than a minute Monday to ambush a trailer truck, which was directed off the road with its escorting vehicle by a man posing as a policeman conducting a traffic census in London's East End.

Six men wielding sawn-off shotguns bundled the truck driver and his two-man escort into a nearby van. The victims were later dumped, bound and gagged but uninjured, in a locked garage several kilometres away.

The cab section of the truck was found Monday night 10 kilometres from the hijack spot, but the trailer, with its 321 ingots weighing 10 metric tons, is still missing.

Scotland Yard police headquarters told Interpol of the vanished silver, which was on its way to London's Tilbury Docks for shipping to East Germany.

Britain's biggest robbery took place in 1975 when $17.2 million was stolen from the Bank of America in London's exclusive Mayfair district.

The previous biggest silver bullion raid in Britain was in 1972, when ingots worth $900,000 were stolen.

In 1963, in what became known as the Great Train Robbery, $5.7 million worth of used banknotes were stolen from a mail train in southern England.

Dectectives said the thieves will be able to dispose of Monday's haul on the large bullion black market. With the decline in the value of paper money, precious metals have become an increasingly sought-after commodity.

The managing director of Jeppesen Heaton, the company shipping the bullion, said the silver for East Germany, was insured.

"As far as I know, the silver was being shipped on behalf of the East German government," he said.

Cubans 'aiding leftists'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. administration today accused Cuba of directly assisting communist groups and leftists guerrillas with men and weapons to help overthrew the ruling centrist junta of El Salvador.

Officials from the state and defence departments told a House subcommittee there is evidence the Fidel Castro regime is helping infiltrate men and weapons into El Salvador through its neighbor, Honduras.

"The Hondurans believe, and our intelligence agrees, that their territory is being used as a conduit for men and weapons into El Salvador by insurgents with Cuban support," said Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defence Franklin Kramer.

"Cuban influence on El Salvadoran and Honduran leftist organizations is longstanding and there are clear indications that the Cubans are assisting these groups in their attempt to overthrow the current government of El Salvador."

The same charges were echoed by Deputy Assistant Secretary of State John Bushnell. Both appeared before the House Foreign Operations Subcommittee to request nearly $9 million in military aid for Honduras and El Salvador.

Both officials explained that part of the $3.53 million in military aid requested for Honduras is to help that country "prevent such activities aimed at subverting a neighboring government."

Koreas clash, spyboat sunk

SEOUL (UPI) — South Korean military units sank an armed North Korean spyboat today less than 48 hours after repulsing frogmen infiltrating from the north, the defence ministry said.

South Korean navy and air force units sank the spyboat as it neared a southeastern industrial and military base, sending an unknown number of northerners to their deaths, the ministry said.

Four South Koreans were killed — one navy men and three fishermen gunned down when the fleeing North Korean vessel fired indiscriminately at fishing boats. One fisherman was missing and one South Korean navy man injured.

It was the second bloody clash between the two Koreas since early Sunday when three armed North Korean frogmen were shot and killed as they crossed to the south at a point less than 15 miles from Seoul.

They were killed by South Korean army troops guarding the Han River estuary. Small submachine guns, hand grenades and 170 other items of equipment were seized.

Barely 45 hours later, the North Korean spyboat approached the southeastern coast and was spotted early today 12 miles east of Pohang.

Pohang, site of many factories as well as a military base, is 170 miles southeast of Seoul.

Following the Sunday incident, the United Nations Command led by a U.S. army general sought a meeting of the Korean Military Armistice Commission to protest the infiltration, military sources said.

Arafat denies his goal destruction of Israel

VIENNA (UPI) — Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat denied for the first-time in an interview published today that his movement wants to destroy Israel.

"It is my intention neither to kill or destroy anyone," Arafat told the daily Die Presse in reply to the question whether the aims of the PLO included the destruction of Israel.

Arafat's remarks were made in Beirut during an interview with Die Presse.

It was the first time the PLO leader has publicly denied that his aim was the destruction of Israel.

During his visit to Austria last year he carefully avoided making any such statement.

"We are prepared to build our independent Palestinian state on the land in Palestine which the Israelis leave," Arafat told the newspaper.

Arms-sale deal made

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — An agreement has reportedly been reached in a case involving alleged illegal arms sales by the Space Research Corp. of North Troy and Highwater, Que.

The governments of the United States and Canada have been investigating allegations the firm sold artillery shells to South Africa in violation of a United Nations arms embargo against the white-ruled government.

The Burlington Free Press reported today an agreement between Space Research and the Justice Department was to be filed in federal court in Rutland.

Details were not available, but the newspaper said neither Space Research, founder Gerald Bull, nor former President Rodgers Gregory will be indicted.

Since the allegations were made public, the company has been split into separate U.S. and Canadian firms.

Canadian authorities last week filed changes against the Quebec affiliate.

French test N-rig

WELLINGTON, N.Z. (Reuter) — France exploded a nuclear device at its Mururoa atoll testing site in the South Pacific Monday, a New Zealand government spokesman said today.

"The device had a yield of 50 kilotons and was quite moderately large," Warwick Smith, superintendent of the seismological observatory in Wellington, said.

Smith said the explosion — twice the size of the nuclear blast that devastated Hiroshima in 1945 — was measured strongly in Rarotonga, in the Cook Islands of the South Pacific, but only weakly at Wellington.

Opening lead — ten of diamonds.

Declarer's most frequent problem is to find the method of play most likely to make the contract. It sometimes requires very good judgment to choose the best line of play, but in most cases the correct method is clear-cut, though not necessarily apparent.

For example, suppose you're in four spades in this deal and West leads a diamond. You win with the ace and the question is how to play the hand. It seems obvious that you should try to ruff a club in dummy to acquire a tenth trick, but this is much easier said than done.

Let's say you played a low club at trick two in order to pave the way for a club ruff in dummy. East would win with the nine and return a trump. He would not have to be a genius to figure out what you're trying to do. Your best bet would be to finesse, but West unfortunately wins the trump with the king and returns a trump. Eventually you go down one.

However, this is the wrong way to play the hand. The right play at trick two is the king of clubs, not a low club! Observe the effect of this play if West has the ace, which you should expect to happen half the time. In the actual case, West wins the king with the ace but is helpless.

He can lead a trump, which you'd win, but when you then played a second club, West would find himself stymied. He would be faced with the unhappy choice of letting you ruff a club in dummy or sacrificing his sure trump trick by leading a second trump.

The king of clubs lead at trick two is not something that springs readily to mind, but it greatly increases your chance to make the contract.

39 PERSONALS

LADIES WOULD YOU LIKE TO travel by lands or sea? For as long and as far as you want. If you are single, divorced, separated or single parent, no triangles please, age is not a factor. If you are in a rut read on. I am forty and debt free, have no ties, 6' tall, 200 pounds, can afford to do what little boys dream about and old men can't. Have a very large and plush car, travel in an extra large executive type holiday trailer, loaded with extras, microwave, TV, stereo, air conditioning, built—in power plant, can stop anyplace you please. Also have a very large live—aboard twin motored power boat, both trailer and boat have separate bedrooms for the ladies owe convenience. This is your choice. Have not yet bought an airplane, sorry about this, but can fly. I like sports and outdoor life and have lots of hobbies. If you'd like to get away for a few days in the middle of the week or weekend, for a month or longer, I'm easy, the time is your own. The trailer or the boat are not sinbin's, I like to travel in comfort, but not alone. I've just arrived on the island, and it's a lot nicer to travel with a companion, if you have funds, fine, if not, be my guest. There are no obligation whatsoever attached to this. Just honest, compatible relationship, and some trust. All it takes is a 17¢ stamp, a few minutes of your time and mine. I would like a photo, but not necessary. I hate writing, a phone is easier. Hold this ad for future reference. Victoria Press Box 243.

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

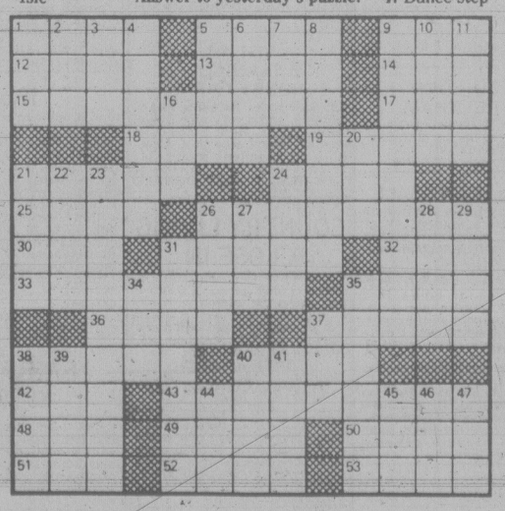
Answer to yesterday's puzzle.



gardening

Watch out for gravitation!

This is a repeat of a column written two years ago which some beginners may have missed. Since the features of the local terrain are hills and valleys a high percentage of gardens are on sloping ground which causes conditions with which the average beginner is not familiar.

When sloping soil is disturbed annually for a vegetable plot and regularly cultivated, it tends to gravitate downhill, and this downhill movement is aggravated by heavy winter rainfall and summer watering.

To offset this downhill movement the gardener should dig and cultivate so as to move the soil back uphill where it belongs. When not conscious of this gravitation the soil at the top of the plot will drop a few inches each year, and in a few years it will be down to hardpan.

When preparing the soil in spring with a spade or garden fork, you may have discovered how much easier it is to start at the bottom and work upwards, throwing the soil downhill, than to start at the top and throw the soil uphill. Most beginners start out in this way.

When a motorized rototiller is used, each strip should be started at the top of the slope so that the soil is thrown uphill behind the tiller, running the machine back uphill without tilling.

On steep slopes it may be better to prepare planting strips crosswise, leaving a narrow path between to prevent downward gravitation.

After the digging or tilling comes the levelling of the surface. This is done from the bottom to the top to work more soil uphill. The same rule applies to all cultivating and hoeing done during the summer season, also when raking up weeds that have been removed from between plants.

When the vegetable plot is on a fairly steep slope the owner is soon aware of what is happening, but it takes much longer to become apparent when the drop is a matter of four to six feet over the length of the lot.

On these gradual slopes it is just as important to follow these digging and cultivating rules.

Watering also has to be done with care. The greater the slope the sooner the water will be running over the surface carrying the soil with it. Nothing is gained by leaving the sprinkler running over a long period. It is better to operate it for several short periods until water has soaked down to root level.

Adding quantities of humus, in the form of compost or old manure, when preparing the soil, will hold some moisture at root level as it does in all well drained soils.

It is not difficult to prevent soil washing down hill during periods of heavy winter rainfall if precautions are taken.

Cover the soil with a three-inch deep layer of compost, or fresh manure if the plot contains no winter vegetables that would be forced into unnatural growth by the nutrients.

Grass clippings could be used. Spread the clippings thinly to dry for a week, then put into a pile with a little good soil between layers. A season's collection will cover and protect a large area of sloping ground.

Some gardeners may think this serious consideration of soil on a sloping lot is hard work, but the returns in good food year after year are worth the effort needed to protect and conserve every square inch.

B.C. Place board ready

Five persons, including Transpo '86 co-ordinator Paul Manning, have been appointed directors of the action committee for British Columbia Place, Environment Minister Stéphen Rogers, the committee chairman, said Monday.

The committee was set up to oversee development of the B.C. Place project on Vancouver's False Creek waterfront.

The provincial government is pinning its hopes for federal funds for the massive project on Transpo '86, a world transportation exhibition scheduled for Vancouver.

Other directors named to board are Alan Laird, chairman of Steel Bros. Canada Ltd.; Lucille Johnstone, Rivtow Straits Ltd. vice-president; Edgar Kaiser Jr., Kaiser Resources chairman; and Bruce Howe, a MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. executive vice-president.

The committee will work with Alvin J. Narod, who earlier this month was named chairman and chief executive officer of B.C. Place.

Rogers said one of the board's priorities is acquisition of lands on the False Creek site. Most of it is owned by Marathon Realty Ltd., the real estate arm of Canadian Pacific.

The government has an agreement in principle with Marathon for a land swap.

Unity on human rights issues defeats dictators: Remi De Roo

There should be more awareness of the need for international solidarity in order to protect the human rights of those suffering under dictatorships like the one in San Salvador, Remi De Roo, Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria, said today.

He was commenting in an interview on the death Monday of Most Rev. Oscar Arnulfo, archbishop of San Salvador, who was gunned down while celebrating mass in a hospital chapel.

De Roo knew Arnulfo personally and met him during a four-day visit to the country in February on human rights matters.

The Victoria bishop is co-chairman of the human rights committee of the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops.

De Roo said the committee will be sending condolences to the archdiocese of San Salvador and its people.

The Canadian bishops will also send a message to the government complaining about its lack of control over such extremist action and calling for more respect for human rights.

Romero was an outspoken advocate of social reform in his country and De Roo said he was one of the last spokesmen for freedom left.

The archbishop had a radio station which he used to put his message across but that was recently blown up, De Roo said.

"No one in the country has the freedom to express himself," he said.

Whenever anyone exercises any kind of leadership in opposition to the injustices that exist he or she is put on a death list and becomes a target for the military.

When he was in San Salvador in February, De Roo visited a human rights office and found that one of the major preoccupations was claiming the bodies of those who had been tortured and killed or were the victims of massacres.

The families of the victims are often so scared to claim the bodies that it is left up to the human rights workers to bury the dead, he said.

"I think one of the things people here can do is become more aware of the need for international solidarity in order to bring freedom to those countries which suffer from dictatorships," De Roo said.

The underlying problem in countries like San Salvador is economic distortion which makes it impossible for the poor and disadvantaged to receive just treatment.

The feudal system is in place with 90 per cent of the land owned by a few rich families. As long as that gulf remains between the rich and the poor there will always be unrest, De Roo added.

"We need to make ourselves more aware of that situation."

Bombs protest slaying

SAN SALVADOR (UPI) — A series of bomb blasts punctuated by machine gun fire rocked tense San Salvador early today, hours after outspoken Archbishop Oscar Romero was shot to death at the altar during a funeral mass.

There were unconfirmed reports that at least three bombs went off at the National Palace.

At least 10 bomb blasts were heard throughout the empty streets of the capital and power to parts of the city was knocked out.

A powerful blast ripped through the downtown Siman stores, owned by rich right-wing families. Machine fire echoed through the predawn darkness.

The violence was apparently triggered by the death of Romero, San Salvador's Roman Catholic archbishop, killed Monday by four gunmen who calmly walked up to the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize nominee as he raised the chalice during a funeral mass and shot him at point-blank range.

El Salvador's military-civilian junta ordered three days of national mourning and vowed to track down his killers.

Scene of the crime was the altar in the chapel of the Hospital of Divine Providence, an institution Romero — a leading critic of military repression and political violence — established for terminal cancer patients.

Parking granted at Camosun

Qualified approval was given Monday by Oak Bay council to a proposed 161-space parking area north of existing parking space at Camosun College at Foul Bay.

The plan goes to a public hearing April 14.

At present 200 students park cars on Foul Bay, Lansdowne and adjoining Oak Bay streets because of a lack of offstreet parking or fees levied by the college for lot stalls.

Oak Bay also is concerned whether Saanich will permit access to the new lot via cul de sac streets to the west. Otherwise, the extra traffic burden on Oak Bay streets may be more than residents will accept.

A preliminary bylaw removing the proposed parking area from single-family zoning was not supported unanimously in first readings.

A group of about 70 seine boat owners charged today that the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union is playing politics with the roe herring stocks.

The Fishing Vessel Owners Association said the union is issuing scare statements about the stocks situation because it has lost control of its members.

"They are trying to hold them together and justify their actions," said association secretary-manager Louiz Souza.

The union has criticized the federal fisheries department for allowing the fishery to continue in northern waters because the UFAWU says stocks in the southern waters are seriously depleted.

But Souza says this position is contradicted by the association's own studies as well as statements from fishermen who monitored the herring during the current season.

Tests show that the fish are still there in large numbers, Souza said, but that they are not turning up or not spawning in the traditional areas.

He said statistics on the amount of spawn that takes place shows that it has gone up each year.

In 1972 there was 8.4 million standard square yards of spawn, 9.7 million in 1973 and last year 30.21 million square yards.

The tests and statistics go counter to the union's claim that the stocks are in trouble, Souza said.

But the union has to defend its decision not to fish this year because of a dispute over the minimum price the fish companies wanted for the herring, Souza said.

This is not to say that there aren't problems with the resource, he added.

For example, although the herring showed up at Barkley Sound in large numbers they didn't spawn.

This is an example of the changing behavior of the herring which may be due to fishing methods.

He reiterated his position that the problem is the federal fisheries department is not spending enough money on research, or on an adequate number of trained people to test the herring prior to the fishery being opened in any given area.

Sidney fights airport

Transport Canada isn't prepared to accept "no" for an answer from Sidney.

A TC representative plans to meet Sidney council to push the federal government's proposal for local operation of airports.

But aldermen Monday night said they have already met federal representatives and voted unanimously against the proposal.

Mayor Norma Sealey said the representative wants to explain why local airport management is a good thing.

Ald. Howard Norquay noted council has just received a letter from Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin's office which says: "Your resolution (opposing the proposal) will be brought to the minister's attention."

"Isn't that a retrograde step from the letter?" Norquay asked.

The proposal would make some communities responsible for the operation of local airports, including repairs and capital costs.

The council has voted against the proposal in principle, saying Sidney does not want to be burdened with operation costs of the Pat Bay Airport, such as upkeep, runway repairs and insurance.

Soul travel, relaxation techniques aired

Soul travelling, reincarnation and relaxation techniques will be discussed during a public lecture and workshop Wednesday sponsored by an international organization called Astro-Soul.

Vancouver Astro-Soul lecturer Susan Scott will give a talk at Paul's Motor Inn at 7 p.m. on reincarnation and how it affects everyone's life.

Scott says Astro-Soul is a non-religious movement devoted to understanding past and future lives and how these experiences relate to this life.

Scott, who has been involved with Astro-Soul nine years, also claims techniques demonstrated during the program will help people interpret dreams, hunches and visions.

The U.S.-based movement was founded in 1968 by spiritual researcher Dr. Francisco Coll.

Chamber, council rift looms

DUNCAN — A campaign by the Duncan-Cowichan Chamber of Commerce for government approval of a six-acre hotel site in the Somenos Flats area and controlled growth in the Cowichan estuary is threatening to create a split with North Cowichan council.

A letter to council and the chamber's full-page advertisement has prompted council to consider "disassociating" itself from the chamber's stand.

The ad urges people to sign a petition currently circulating in the Cowichan Valley. "North Cowuchan has endorsed and approved limited, controlled growth in the estuary and has three times approved the hotel site," the petition states.

The chamber also urges a new marina facility for the Cowichan estuary, "especially if any dredging is to be done."

Ald. Alan Hussey moved council dissassociate itself from the campaign.

"If council is in any way to maintain its credibility, it should disassociate itself from the chamber's letter," he said.

10 break-ins net one year in jail

A young man who broke into businesses 10 times in two months was sentenced in Victoria county court Monday to a year in jail.

Donald James Jorgenson, 19, pleaded guilty earlier to 10 counts of breaking, entering and theft of items ranging from potato chips to trucks between last Dec. 27 and March 1.

"I think he will best be served, and the community's interest as well, by something that will smarten him up, and that will mean a period of incarceration," said Judge M.L.T. Drake.

He gave Jorgenson one year on each of seven counts, and six months on three others, all to be served concurrently.

Court was told two offences took place after Jorgenson had been arrested, charged with eight counts and released on bond.

Defence counsel said the accused had been unemployed during the two months and had a drinking problem. "He simply wasn't directing his mind to the consequences," said lawyer C.E. Hanman.

The accused was arrested Feb. 24 and charged with taking two cars and a van from Budget Rent a Car, 1721 Island Highway, on one occasion and a van on another. Vehicles in the first count were recovered in various parts of Greater Victoria, but the second van was discovered at Pt. Renfrew, burned out.

Other counts involved theft of fish, soda pop and hamburger from Six-Mile Café, Colwood; cigarettes, pop and chips from Millstream Shell station, Langford; and theft of a car on each of three counts involving Cornell Chev Olds, Victoria.

Two cars were recovered at Six-Mile Hotel and another on Bradene Road, Colwood, said Crown counsel Peter Birkett.

At Mill Bay Pharmacy, two watches valued at $80 to $100 and a bottle of asthma medicine were stolen.

Two days after his arrest, Jorgenson returned to Budget Rent a Car with a colleague, removed a floor safe, carried it to a wooded area and dashed it against rocks in a futile attempt to open it. He went back to the premises and tried to steal a truck by hot-wiring, but was unsuccessful.

Going to Millstream Olds, the accused stole an unlicensed car, was chased by police on the Island Highway, lost control of the vehicle, jumped out and ran off.

The car rolled backwards over a bank and landed upsidedown.

Police used a tracking dog to locate Jorgenson in the bush.

Bad cheque guilty plea

Robert James Lang, 23, was granted an absolute discharge Monday in Victoria county court when he changed his plea to guilty before a jury trial for false pretences. He had been accused of obtaining $407.52 worth of goods from Butler Lafarge Ltd. by means of a worthless cheque May 30, 1979.

Probation in OD break-in

A man who helped steal drugs the night a companion died through overdose was sentenced to one day in jail and a year's probation in county court.

Peter Vandermeer, 26, pleaded guilty to breaking, entering and theft before Judge M.L.T. Drake, who ordered the man to abstain from alcohol and drugs during the probation.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Vandermeer and two others went to Western Drug Mart, 1913 Sooke, about midnight May 31, 1979. A hole was broken through the roof and drugs were stolen.

Early the next morning Shawnigan RCMP were called to a dwelling at Spectacle Lake mobile home park where Richard Fraser was found dead after taking drugs. Birkett said police were told Fraser lay down to sleep and never woke up.

A quantity of drugs from the raided store also was found at the mobile home.

Defence counsel Jasper Bomhof said Vandermeer's involvement had been more in the nature of lookout or accomplice rather than instigator, and he had not actually entered the drug store.

Before the Judge

A 19-year-old youth was given a two-month jail term Monday in Victoria provincial court after being found guilty of possessing a weapon dangerous to the public peace.

Judge Harold Alder made the finding against Richard Douglas Timms, 1340 Sussex.

Timms was charged following an early-morning incident Feb. 22 outside the Halfway House beer parlor, 856 Esquimalt, between civilians and members of the Canadian Armed Forces stationed at CFB Work Point.

The problem started when the civilians, with whom Timms had been drinking, played a game of "foozball" with the soldiers. The civilians ended up owing $12 and an argument began.

Timms' two companions went outside first and got into a cab and two of the four servicemen followed shortly after and confronted Timms. The taxi stopped and Timms' friends returned to the area not far from the beer parlor where the incident took place.

Timms produced a knife, which he initially pointed at the throat of Justin White and then threatened another soldier with it before police arrived.

John Evans, 20, testifying in defence of Timms, said the forces personnel suggested going outside to fight when the group was still in the beer parlor but said the civilians were outnumbered. Evans said Timms pulled the knife in self defense.

Timms had previous convictions for theft, dangerous driving and breach of probation on Nov. 28, 1977, receiving seven months definite and five months indeterminate. He was also convicted Feb. 27, 1980, of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 and given a 14-day jail term.

Alder also imposed a one-year probation and ordered Timms not to possess a belt-knife in any municipality for a year.

Judge Lorne Pearce handed out a suspended sentence and one year's probation to a former janitor at a Victoria theatre.

Marc James Monsarat, 25, of 1547 Foul Bay, pleaded guilty to stealing $320 from the Towne Cinema, 808 Douglas, where he worked.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said the theatre's management noticed the money missing March 3 from advance sales of midnight-show tickets. The money had been placed in an envelope in the theatre's safe, Laughton said.

Monsarat was questioned by Victoria police and agreed to take a polygraph test, but failed to keep the appointment. He finally admitted taking the money March 15, telling officers he put $220 of it in his bank account. About $85 has been recovered, court was told.

Defence lawyer Steven Kelliher said Monsarat was experiencing financial problems, earning only $650 a month. He said Monsarat needed a root canal and 15 fillings and had no dental plan.

Kelliher also told the court Monsarat tried for four or five days to sneak the money back into the theatre but could not succeed.

"The courts have always considered theft from employers more serious," Pearce told Monsarat.

Indians' patience on education 'wearing thin'

Greater Victoria school trustees were warned Monday native Indians' patience is wearing thin waiting for an acceptable educational program for native children.

United Native Nations spokesman Bob Warren berated the school board for being preoccupied with dollars and cents and what has happened in the past instead of acting to give Indians more control over how their children are taught.

"I'm just about fed up having to live with decisions made on our behalf," he said.

He was concerned about what will happen to children in future, not for cultural but for racial reasons.

"It's a question of racism . . . an opportunity for the Ku Klux Klan to come in and make idiots of us," he said.

The board has agreed to hire a native Indian co-ordinator, on the basis of a job description designed by the school district's native Indian Education Commission. A similar method would retain a home-school co-ordinator for Indian children.

But trustees do not approve at this time of a quota system for hiring Indian staff, or of voting $159,800 as proposed by the commission for its suggesting spending program this year.

The motion to accept the program was brought forward by Trustee John Young, but he withdrew it after making critical remarks about the board's attitude.

He said the motion did not stand a hope of being accepted, or even seconded, by a board he accused of educational malpractice toward native Indians.

Indian parents can expect none of their children to graduate from high school in the existing system, which he called a national disgrace. Although 5 per cent of the school population in Victoria is native Indian, perhaps 1 per cent of these make it through high school, he said.

These children are victimized in an unjust system, Young said.

"It is my earnest hope the native people will not give up in their attempt to get an education for their children."

Trustee Mark Fisher said he agreed completely with Young and would like Indians to have control over their program without the disaster of federal government involvement, nor white, Anglo-Saxon Christian bias.

Trustee Martin Levin said no one could fail to be impressed by tales of discrimination and exclusion, or insensitive or blind to the injustices suffered by Indians. But the problem needs serious and concerted effort to rectify.

Levin said there was no agreement on what to do about it. Priorities need to be set and needs sorted out. And the prejudice and discrimination is not alone a school district responsibility.

Simply to put up $159,800 will not solve the problem, he said.

Trustee Mike Hutchison said it was wrong to try to rectify past injustices in a climate of shame going back 200 years.

The board should not indulge in self-flagellation, "sit there beating ourselves with verbal birch twigs and never do anything about the program."

He said he hoped the native Indian commission could be convinced the board did not really differ from its views, but just can't agree on the method to take.

Commission co-chairman Marie Cooper was disappointed in the negativism of both sides and sorry that the communication which came through at a recent discussion between trustees and native Indians had lapsed.

Chairman Carol Pickup said there was no value in looking back or simply at the cost of a program. Establishing the commission was an important move and it will soon be time to consider a new provisional budget and new programs, she said, urging trustees to think positively.

Morse outlines village, Saanich delays project

Canadian actor Barry Morse made an eloquent plea to Saanich council Monday for a 16th-century Elizabethan village to complement construction of a Shakespearean theatre planned for the 7.7-acre Maltwood property.

The proposal was made on behalf of the Victoria-based Lord Chamberlain's Players.

Morse, the society's artistic director, made an appearance in Saanich several months ago to publicize the cause.

He spent half an hour Monday enthusiastically talking about the new village proposal.

Council agreed to a 60-day moratorium on plans to develop the estate to give the society time to make an official presentation.

Saanich is accepting submissions for a restaurant operation in The Thatch building on the property to blend in with the Elizabethan theme.

The theatre replica and restaurant proposals have been approved by council for the land, purchased recently for $375,000 from the University of Victoria.

An option to buy or lease the property will be discussed by the society board of directors and a council committee made up of Mayor Mel Couvelier and Ald. Howard Sturrock and John Mika.

Pat then a rap for District 61

Administrators got a pat on the back followed by a knuckle rap when the School District 61 financial statement for 1979 was presented by auditors Monday.

The operating surplus of $349,165, compared with $143,284 in 1978, was commendably close budgetting, said a spokesman for Thorne Riddell and Co. chartered accountants, especially when dealing with a $50 million program.

But there was criticism over a decentralized purchasing system which allows for less control of spending, and the accountant said he would probably continue to find fault until the system is tightened up.

The district is returning to a more central purchasing system.

Teachers ought to pay training share: Young

A program for in-service training of school teachers should require some financial input from teachers, Trustee John Young told Greater Victoria school board Monday.

He was commenting on a motion by Trustee Lavinia Greenwood calling for the education ministry to pay for in-service learning because all adult education is now recognized as a provincial responsibility.

The motion was referred to finance committee for examination.

But Young said there is no hope the ministry would enlarge its teacher training allocations to include in-service programs.

Greenwood said the local taxpayers should not be required to support this kind of training, and Young said the teachers themselves should have some responsibility, not necessarily half-and-half.

"I think teachers should put up some money. They are paid well enough now to invest some contribution to improve their own qualifications," he said.

In other business the board agreed to spend $6,700 for its share of a six-month internship for a University of Victoria graduate in educational administration.

The district will get the services of a junior administrator who will be furthering his training.

Crowd outside embassy jeers at mock Jimmy Carter pretends to plead for mercy

B.C.Tel move to boost rates under fire

The B.C. branch of the Consumer Association of Canada will formally oppose two rate increases sought this year by the B.C. Telephone Company.

CAC Vancouver office manager Janet Fast said today the organization will intervene before the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

B.C. Tel announced Monday it will apply for increases for private and business telephones.

However, the provincial government says it has no intention of intervening in the rate increase application.

"I doubt we will make any submission," said Universities, Science and Communications Minister Pat McGeer.

The proposed increases would raise Victoria's monthly private phone residential rate by almost a dollar, from $7.65 to $8.05 June 1 and to $8.60 on Dec. 17.

The private business rate here would go up by almost $3, from $19.70 a month to $21.15 in June and to $22.65 in December.

There would be no increase in two-party or multi-party residential service rates. The rates would not go up for touch calling or residential or business extension phones.

The CAC's Fast called the proposed rate increases excessive because B.C. Tel has failed for three years to improve quality of service.

The company did not make improvements ordered in 1977 after the last rate adjustment, she said.

"The CRTC ordered B.C. Tel to clean up its act and that hasn't happened.

"It would be rather naive to expect them (B.C. Tel) to do it this time."

Problems include on-line static, incomplete calls, cut-offs and slow service, she said.

"Obviously the rate increase went elsewhere."

The increase application comes at a time shareholders received the highest dividend rate ever, she said.

The company was recently ordered to return $7 million in excess profits to customers.

McGeer said: "This is a federal matter. If the federal government were to return the jurisdiction to British Columbia, that would be a different question altogether."

McGeer doesn't feel the province should make any representations to the CRTC.

B.C Tel labelled the increases "absolutely essential" to permit financing of a $301 million capital program of construction projects to meet service demands in 1980.

B.C. Tel said in a news release it wants a 5.3-per-cent increase on residential service, effective June 1, and a second increase to bring that up to 12.5 per cent, effective Dec. 17.

The company is seeking a 7.3-per-cent increase for business lines by June, increasing to 15 per cent by December.

Long distance rates in B.C. and Alberta have been restructured to add two per cent to revenue.

B.C. Tel chairman Gordon MacFarlane said if the full application is approved, revenues in 1980 will increase by $49.3 million, or six per cent of total revenue.

MacFarlane said it is the first application for an increase since 1976 — rates were adjusted in May, 1977 — and blamed it on spiralling interest rates and rising costs.

Visit the stars

Jill Clayburgh has been nominated as best actress for the second time in two years.

After a spectacular performance in An Unmarried Woman, she won high praise during the past 12 months for a similar role in Starting Over.

The Academy Awards will be announced on April 14.

Clayburgh began her acting career in 1972 in Portnoy's Complaint but her roles continued to be relatively minor until she got the chance to give her classic portrayal of a woman recently divorced in An Unmarried Woman.

She had been considered a major challenger for the Oscar but it went to Jane Fonda for her performance in Coming Home.

The Victoria Times and VI*90 this year are again sponsoring a Visit the Stars contest, offering a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood for the person who correctly predicts the Oscar winners for best actress, best actor and best movie.

The official entry form, along with the full list of rules, is in an advertisement on page 29 today.

Try the spies, mob chants as Ghotbzadeh goads U.S.

Times News Services

Tens of thousands of Iranians marched on the U.S. embassy in Tehran today protesting against the deposed shah's move to Egypt and demanding the American hostages be put on trial.

Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh called the shah's move "a moral victory for Iran."

An angry crowd estimated at between 50,000 and 60,000 demonstrated outside the U.S. embassy but there were no reports of violence. The crowd shouted denounciations of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and "American imperialism."

Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi is running a high fever and is likely to be operated on in a few days, Sadat said today after visiting the ousted Iranian monarch in his hospital room.

"The ex-shah has 21 of the best lawyers in the world and has the support of the United States and Western European countries," Ghotbzadeh told a news conference in Tehran "but seeing that our case was strong enough to put him in jail and to pave the way for his extradition, he fled."

"It was a moral victory for the Iranian case against the shah," he said.

Asked about the next step regarding the release of the American hostages, now in their 142nd day of captivity, the foreign minister said: "We'll wait and see."

Ghotbzadeh denied the release of the 50 Americans was linked with the extradition of the shah.

"Let us make it two separate cases," he said, "The extradition of the shah is one case and the hostages is the other."

"As I have explained, at the end, the Panamian government had these two issues all mixed up."

Tehran radio said the shah's arrival in Cairo "could be a divine gift because it will lead to a revolution in that Islamic country which will liberate its people from the imperialist and Zionist reign."

Meanwhile, the White House said Iran would bear "full responsibility" for any punitive action against the U.S. embassy hostages as a result of the shah's move to Egypt.

Several Iranian officials have suggested the hostages be tried as spies as a result of the shah's leaving Panama. However, President Carter's aides are saying they do not expect the shah's flight to Egypt will have strong repercussions on the American hostages or the search for peace in the Middle East.

Prices still soaring in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a virtual replay of January's torrid inflation, United States' consumer prices soared another 1.4 per cent in February, the government reported today.

Last month's increase in the labor department's consumer price index matched the 1.4 per cent rise in January for a compounded annual rate of some 18 per cent. The culprits again were sharply higher gasoline and home heating oil prices and mortgage interest rates, the report showed.

An 18 per cent rate for the entire year would be the worst inflation since the Second World War price controls were lifted in 1946 and a considerable jump from last year's 13.3 per cent inflation.

"It's virtually identical, with the exception of apparel being a little more moderate," labor department economist Patrick Jackman said of the February report. "I would look for mortgage interest and energy to continue rising. I don't really foresee any improvement until June or July..."

The labor department also reported that inflation continued to take its toll on earnings.

Average weekly earnings fell 1.4 per cent from January to February

CP strike cuts island supplies

Delays are beginning to show in the shipment of food and other consumer goods to Vancouver Island from the mainland after only one day of a strike by CP Rail employees.

The strike by 60 members of the Seafarers International Union, who work on freight vessels, began at noon Monday.

Affected is the shipment of foodstuffs, general merchandise, coal sulphur, liquified propane gas, machinery and paper products to the Island.

Commodities shipped to the mainland from the Island include lead concentrates, pulp and paper products, lumber, scrap metal and fish products.

The freight companies are trying to use the B.C. Ferry service but the system can't cope with the increased traffic.

As many as 23 trucks were backed up at the same terminal at one point this morning.

Meanwhile, the trucking companies met today with Transport Minister Alex Fraser to make a pitch for extra sailings to cope with the added commercial traffic.

Bill Blaney, president of the B.C. Motor Transport Association, said prior to the meeting that the solution seemed simple.

The government has ferries which are idle at night and the freight companies have trailers that they can't move.

The obvious solution is to run the ferries at night, Blaney said.

Fraser, however, indicated before going into the meeting that the truckers wouldn't get the extra runs.

But he said he would be bringing the matter up at a board of directors meeting later this week.

Blaney estimated that CP Rail vessels handled 60 to 70 per cent of all the freight coming to the Island from Vancouver.

Herb Harris, Victoria manager for Johnston Terminals, said his company is already experiencing a backlog in goods to be moved.

He estimated the effect of the strike will be "very very serious."

$500M suit over reactor

PARSIPPANY, N.J. (AP) — General Public Utilities Corp., owner of the crippled Three Mile Island reactor, said today it has sued the reactor's designer and manufacturer for more than $500 million.

The utility said it has charged Babcock and Wilcox Co. with "gross negligence, strict liability for equipment failure, intentional breach of contract and breach of express and implied warranties" in connection with the reactor involved in the accident last March.

The utility owns Metropolitan Edison, which operated the reactor at the Three Mile Island plant near Middletown, Pa. The plant was the site of the worst accident in the history of commercial nuclear energy in the U.S.

GPU Chairman William Kuhns said the company, after its own investigation of the accident, "firmly believes that the proximate cause of the accident was the failure of Babcock and Wilcox" to provide proper procedures and training to the utility's operators.

The suit alleges the Babcock and Wilcox procedures and training for both routine and emergency conditions were incorrect, incomplete and inappropriate to the system and misled the operators in their handling of the plant.

$2M loss predicted for Maggie successor

By JAKE BANKY

If the Princess Marguerite had run this summer it would have made a substantial profit.

But her replacement, the Queen of Prince Rupert, will lose a lot of money on the Victoria-Seattle run.

That conclusion is contained in a confidential briefing paper compiled by the staff of the legislature's committee on Crown corporations.

The paper says the Marguerite made a profit of $250,000 last summer and was expected to show a net gain of $900,000 this summer. These figures include depreciation and refit costs.

Because of reduced capacity and assuming only one return trip per day, the Queen of Prince Rupert is expected to be $2.4 million in the red at the end of the summer.

The briefing paper downgrades the proposal that the Rupert make two round-trips every 24 hours.

"This can be done, but it would involve night travel which would be neither convenient or attractive for most passengers."

The document states: "Based on cost comparision alone, first choice would be the Princess Marguerite. Howéver, the decision apparently has already been made on grounds of safety and reliability that the Princess Marguerite will not operate in 1980."

The paper does not examine the validity of that decision.

If the bigger Queen of Surrey had been used on the Victoria-Seattle service, as suggested by many, it would also have lost money.

Because of high refit costs and increased depreciation it is estimated the Surrey would have lost at least $600,000 over the summer. Instead the Surrey will go on the midcoast run to Prince Rupert and lose an estimated $5 million a year.

That is $1.8 million more than the annual loss incurred by the Queen of Prince Rupert on that run.

The Rupert, after its summer in southern waters, will be placed on permanent service between Prince Rupert and the Queen Charlotte Islands. That will also be a losing proposition.

The confidential document says under the most optimistic conditions net loss on this service will be $3.2 million a year. This represents an annual subsidy of about $600 for every resident of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Meanwhile, the discussion paper suggests a permanent replacement for the Marguerite might be found next year when two new jumbo ferries go into service and the Ferry Corporation finds itself with two surplus vessels, each with a capacity of more than 1,000 passengers.

As for the proposed jetfoil service between Victoria and Seattle, the paper reveals a fare of $20 for a one-way trip has been discussed.

"However, the organizers plan to operate the service so that it at least breaks even and for this reason fare levels will depend on the lease cost to be negotiated with Boeing."

10 calls an hour in mortgage protest

By PAUL MINVIELLE

A Times story on Ena Curran's protest against high mortgage interest rates produced an avalanche of calls from Victorians Monday.

Proposal 89, the protest movement launched by Mississauga car salesman Viv Woolford and named for his condominium number, is alive and growing in Victoria.

Curran, who heard and heeded Woolford's message several weeks ago, took up the cause and collected almost 200 signatures by talking to people in two shopping centres here.

Only five people refused to participate.

In the lag since her shopping centre forays, Curran picked up 30 more names.

But when the Times hit the street Monday, Curran's phone began to ring off the hook, indicating the movement is just taking wing.

Monday evening, Curran found herself handling almost 10 calls an hour, a total of about 70 in the eight hours after the phone started ringing at at 3:15 p.m.

But Curran had to get up for work this morning, so after finishing an 11:15 p.m. call she unplugged the phone.

Ten callers were individuals and businessmen requesting petitions.

No one has yet offered to help with mailing costs or secretarial chores, but the Curran children are shouldering much of the load.

Linda, 15, takes typing in high school and she has individually typed each petition sheet. Curran's son Pat, 19, asked for petition forms to take to work at Cloverdale Paints at Hillside and Quadra.

And her husband?

"Bob is tolerating it all," Curran said. "I've never known an Irishman to be so patient."

Curran still wants anyone interested in the protest to write her at 4171 Borden in Saanich rather than phoning.

"We want to be able to send tons of mail on to Ottawa," she said.

That tonnage will be coming from almost 100 Canadian communities where Woolford's declaration of frustration touched a nerve.

At last count, Woolford had close to 250,000 names backing his protest, and he wants two million.

Proposal 89 was born when Woolford learned he and 20 other families in his condominium building were in danger of losing their homes.

Mortgages taken out five years ago at 9 per cent came due late last year and Woolford and his neighbors found themselves renewing at close to 15 per cent.

Payments jumped from around $475 to $742.

Woolford had to take a two-week leave absence from his job to handle requests for information about his protest, and then he finally had to quit.

The 31-year-old father of four and his wife are prepared to lose everything they have to prove a point.

Woolford hopes the rally in the Mississauga Valley Community Club this Sunday will result in a national homeowners' association.

The Association to Control Mortgage Rates was already launched in Vancouver last Wednesday, so local groups are pressing ahead on their own.

Curran realizes a meeting is necessary in Victoria but nothing as yet has been organized.

She speculated this morning that such a gathering might be best after the Mississauga rally.

And she hopes such backers as Cyril Shelford, former Socred MLA for Skeena and minister of agriculture, will be able to assist her in organizing it.

Sorry, wrong number to a gracious couple

There are gracious people in the world and Anne Worthington is one of them.

The Worthington's phone number slipped into a Times story Monday about mortgage interest rates, generating 70 calls.

The correct number is 479-0069.

Was Mrs. Worthington upset?

"Oh no. You don't mind when it's for a good cause like this."

She could have left her phone off the hook. Instead she and her husband, Ednward, redirected all calls to the right number.

"Can you tell us where we can sign the petition?" Mrs. Worthington asked.

TOWN TALK

The NDP MLA for Shuswap-Revelstoke, Bill King, came to the legislature Monday armed with a long list of awards for the Socreds.

For example:

For Grace McCarthy, a pair of gloves with the right index finger missing.

For Judge Larry Eckardt, a pair of gloves with an extra index finger on the right hand.

Eckardt was the man responsible for the new electoral boundaries which added an unusual extension to McCarthy's riding of Vancouver-Little Mountain. That extension has since become known as "Gracie's finger."

Also on the list:

For George Lenko, a copy of A Man Called Intrepid autographed by his old boss. Lenko, McCarthy's personal aide, resigned during the Dirty Tricks affair, claiming it was all his fault.

Another book award went to Socred backbencher Peter Hyndman, Vancouver South. King said he should get a copy of Great Expectations autographed by Pat Jordan. She made it into the cabinet and Hyndman didn't.

The NDP thought King's list was hilarious. The Socreds permitted themselves an occasional grin.

A new type of dragon kite on the market this spring may have more bite than its owners bargain for — enough to prove fatal, in fact.

B.C. Hydro's safety co-ordinator, Earl Pritchett, is concerned about the kites, made of plastic with aluminized backing and long tails.

Not only should parents and teachers caution children not to fly kites near power lines, Pritchett says, they should also make sure kite lines are made of dry string. Never use wire or metallic string.

Stay away from power lines and telephone wires, he warns. Most phone poles are power poles, too, usually carrying about 6,900 volts per line. It takes only 110 volts to kill.

If your kite is hung up on a power line, call Hydro and let a trained linesman remove it.

Running a hospital isn't an easy job.

Members of Victoria General Hospital's board of management have been faced with some controversial issues recently and consequently have come under fire from the public.

Chairman Alan Patterson noted one letter of criticism, accompanied by a newspaper clipping. It was a model of brevity.

"Whoever you are, smarten up," it said.

For more than a year the birds have been doing what taxpayers would like to, but a clean-up campaign this month is shedding some light on the inner workings of Victoria city hall.

They're removing wind-blown bird droppings decorating the tall windows on the south side of the modern annex.

The mess is the work of starlings which roost in the honeycomb sunshades in front of the windows. Officials are hoping new scarecrow devices will avoid a fresh coat of avian whitewash.

The guck was six inches deep in spots before the clean-up and aldermen and reporters frequenting committee rooms overlooking the south side kept the curtains tightly drawn. Now they can raise the shades but the question remains: will any of them see the light?

It took a bribe of 90 pounds of choice ling cod fillets worth $143 to get Sealand's Stellar sea lions, Benjamin, who weighs in at 1,800 pounds, and Tora, a modest 900 pounds, to settle for a holding pen while their regular pool was brought up to scratch on the weekend.

A work crew directed by Sealand manager Angus Matthews began work after closing time Saturday and drained, cleaned and painted the pool in 12 hours, refilling it with about 75 metric tons of filtered water in time for Sunday's opening.

It was the first time the pool had been drained, cleaned and repainted in 10 years.

A Victoria high school student won a province-wide competition last week, but he couldn't collect the prize.

David Wingrove, a Grade 12 student at St. Michael's University School, had the highest grades of any student in B.C. in a German language competition sponsored by the West German government. The competition was open to students who were not of German background.

The prize was supposed to be a month's all-expenses paid trip to Germany. When the time came to collect it, however, it was found David is officially a British citizen, although he came to Canada when he was three years old. The competition was open only to Canadian students.

Empress Hotel management consoled David a little by inviting him, his family and his German teacher to be their guest at a special evening they're putting on, entitled A Night in Germany.

The Human Rights Code forbids help-wanted ads from specifying the sex of employees to be hired, but employers sometimes find curious ways of explaining what their real needs are.

Take the YM-YWCA, for instance. It needed a don for the women's residence it runs on the second floor of its downtown building. It couldn't specify a female was needed, so it included in the ad the phrase, "Must be eligible to live in women's residence."

And just what criteria might the management have been thinking of?

The first production run of the UVic Heat Treat — a portable life-saving instrument for hypothermia victims — will be ready next month.

Developed by University of Victoria biologists, the device is being assembled and distributed by Scitech Products Ltd., 570 Linnet, which happens to be the home of cold water survival researcher Dr. John Hayward.

The university team was unable to reach agreement with a manufacturer to make and market the entire unit at a reasonable price, so component parts are being made by private firms, including Scott Plastics.

Heat Treat goes to the heart of the problem by warming the core of lungs and blood circulating system.

Victoria's first annual home and garden show is a success more than a month before it opens at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

All space for the April 25-27 show has been sold and the 150 booths make it the largest of its kind on Vancouver Island, says a jubilant Alan MacGillivray, president of the Victoria section, Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada.

Premier Bill Bennett and Lands, Parks and Housing Minister Jim Chabot will open the show, Home Expo '80, which will include demonstrations by CBC personalities Jan Eakes, the Mr. Chips of You-Can-Do-It, and gardening adviser Bernard Moore.

There also will be fashion shows, entertainment and a film produced by Sam Bawlf examining future Victoria and Vancouver Island developments.

Lions clubs are in charge of ticket distribution in aid of Lions charities, and a ticket raffle offers a trip for two to the Caribbean.

Transport minister Pepin (right) does a nifty sidestep

Pepin: all charm but no answers

There was lots of Gallic charm but no answers when Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin held his first press conference in Victoria on Monday.

He arrived by helicopter 30 minutes late at the Department of Transport's new multi-million dollar base on Dallas Road and it was obvious he hadn't done his homework.

The press conference — a few quick questions on the helicopter pad — was uninformative.

The minister made it clear he had only three things on his mind during his swing through the west — the jurisdictional problems between B.C. and the federal government over the seabed below Roberts Bank, tentative funding for Prince Rupert port and grain handling facilities and double-tracking of the Canadian National Railway, which he plans to discuss tomorrow in Winnipeg.

Pepin was asked if the weatherships Quadra and Vancouver, due to be taken out of service in 1981, would be given a reprieve. He was not aware they were operated by his ministry until informed by his deputy, Arthur Koreger. Pepin thought they came under Environment Canada.

In any case, the minister did not know if there was any money in the budget to keep the ships operating.

Nor could he say if Victoria International Airport will finally get a radar system. He merely shrugged, smiled and reminded his interogators he had been in office only 15 days.

Reporters drew another blank on search-and-rescue facilities. On this one, Pepin was unaware of a jury's findings last month into the loss of 30 men aboard the ore carrier Lee Wang Zin when she capsized and sank on Christmas Day. The jury urged that a coast guard vessel large enough to withstand storm conditions be based at Prince Rupert.

Earlier in Vancouver, Pepin had said his government was willing to spend $47 million on expansion of Roberts Bank facilities but a compromise was needed on the federal-provincial wrangle over seabed rights.

The federal government has appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada on a 1976 B.C. Court of Appeal decision that the seabed between Vancouver Island and the Mainland comes under provincial jurisdiction.

Police bid would add 10 to force

The Victoria police department is asking for enough money in its 1980 budget of $5.3 million to hire an additional 10 constables.

Its provisional budget — up 10 per cent from last year — was presented to the police board this morning and members went over the spending proposals in detail.

The extra manpower was the last item in the budget, which was 21 typed pages long, and the board hadn't yet got around to discussing the request.

Cost of 10 more policemen is estimated at $95,890. The department has budgeted wages for only the last five months of the year, at the probationary constable's rate, because of the time it would take to hire additions to the force if the board gives approval.

Full-year costs for the new officers would be more than $200,000.

With the hold-the-line mood prevalent on city council, however, it's not certain that the police board, chaired by Mayor Bill Tindall, will automatically approve the plan.

Board members today questioned individual items in the provisional budget and after more than two hours still had three-quarters of the estimates to go through.

For example, board member Alf Hood wondered why white uniform shirts for the officers had gone from $10 each last year to $20 in this year's budget.

Deputy chief constable Jim Smith said few manufacturers carry the special shirts made with epaulettes and that was the best quote obtained by the department.

The board was also told that the Victoria police are still replacing outmoded and obsolete equipment. Two electronic motorcycle sirens costing $350 each are included in the budget, to replace old foot-operated mechanical sirens which operate on the motorcycle's wheel.

Smith said the department had fallen behind in past years in some areas, and is now in the process of catching up.

The department has also increased its purchase of .38 calibre revolvers this year. Two dozen are budgeted where only four were bought last year.

He just got a bad break-in

An unfortunate thing happened to an unidentified man swinging a two-by-four in a bid to break into a coin shop at 831 Fort Monday night.

The police came by.

City police said the man, trying to break through a door panel at the Van Isle Coin and Stamp Shop about 10 p.m., ran off without gaining access.

Earlier Monday, Donald O'Marr, 1683 Chandler, returned home to find a bedroom light on and a utility room window open.

Someone had been in the house and stole $120 in bills from a jewel box.

A young man in jogging jacket, meanwhile, ran off with $49 after holding up 7-Eleven Food Store, 2735 Douglas, about 4 p.m.

Police said the robber used a small hand gun to demand money.

He wore a navy blue jacket with sleeve stripes and was described as slim and 5 feet, 10 inches tall.

Team illness traced to ice machine leak

Carbon monixide fumes from a malfunctioning Zamboni ice-cleaning machine likely caused the illness of Victoria-Esquimalt peewee hockey players and officials on Saturday, New Westminster recreation director Ron Reichelt said Monday.

He said tests conducted by the provincial health department and the Workers' Compensation Board showed high levels of carbon monoxide emissions from the machine. A faulty carburetor was blamed.

Alternative fuel eyed for ferries

A program may soon be launched to find an alternative fuel to the diesel being used by B.C. Ferries.

George Baldwin, chief operations officer, said today the use of alternative fuels is only being discussed "on the surface" at the moment.

"We will have to look into the theoretical aspect first," he said.

Two of the fuels that could be considered are LPG (liquefied petroleum gas) and pulverized coal.

"The major problem with LPG would be carrying it. It would probably have to be carried in pressurized containers," he said.

Traffic manager Bill Bouchard said the ferry fleet consumes 18½ million gallons of diesel fuel a year and costs are soaring.

In 1978, just over $10 million was spent on fuel and oil, and in the year 1979-1980 this is expected to jump 20 per cent to at least $12 million.

Depending on decisions made by the National Energy Board, Bouchard said the cost could climb to $19 million by the 1980-1981 period.

Meanwhile, Seaspan International Ltd., Canada's largest towboat company, has instructed the masters of its 51 tugs to throttle back engine power by 50 revolutions per minute.

Doug Osborne, vice-president of operations, told the fourth annual B.C. Towboat Industry Conference the order is the result of tests made aboard the Seaspan Doris and the Seaspan Venture.

In the February test, the 1,400-horsepower Deutz diesel of the Seaspan Venture was throttled back from 900 revolutions per minute to 800. The speed of the tug and its tandem tow of two chip barges, one partly laden and the other empty, reduced from 8½ knots to eight knots.

Fuel consumption dropped from 68 U.S. gallons an hour to 32.
